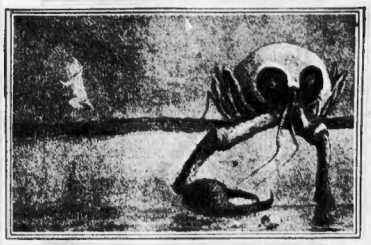
"WAR"

THE German-speaking world is intensely interested just now in the work of Alfred Kübin, a young Austrian artist, who is described as an "art philosopher." Every one of Kubin's pictures represents some phase of the philosophy of life as the artist sees it. It must be said that he sees life as a long tragedy, filled with pain and horror from beginning to end. The interest of his work, however, lies chiefly in his fantastic—almost insane—imagination. As one critic well expresses it, Kubin seems to catch and depict things that we glimpse only in dreams, nightmares and hallucinations.

In the first place, there is his drawing, "The Soul Pool from Which Babies Go to Be Born." He sees a baby not as a lovely, smiling little creature, but as a spider-like monster, looking with horror-stricken eyes into a gloomy future.

Man's entrance upon the battle of life is called "A Cry of Anguish." A tiger wounded by an arrow shrieks with pain, while the vultures looking for his corpse, hang above him.



"THE SOUL POOL FROM WHICH BABIES GO TO BE BORN."

"Mankind Hanging Over the Eternal Abyss" is an illustration of the ordinary man's position in life. "The Spirit That Dwells in the Sea" symbolises the shipwreck that awaits him sooner or later. "Force," the monster that rules the world, is represented as a monstrous walrus sitting upon

New Serums and Vaccines by Which Science Hopes to Stamp Out Measles, Scarlet Fever and Whooping Cough.

What "Simple" Diseases of Childhood May Bring

Measles is often accompanied with pneumonia and followed by deafness, blindness and kidney trouble.

Whooping cough may be accompanied with pneumonia and meningitis.

Scarlet fever may be accompanied by meningitis and frequently results in heart disease, deafness, rheumatism and kidney trouble.

Diphtheria may be accompanied by meningitis and be followed by kidney trouble.

SCIENCE is making greater efforts than ever before to put an end to children's diseases.

These diseases, particularly measles, whooping cough and scarlet fever, though often slightingly referred to as "the usual children's diseases," are by no means the simple ailments which "experienced" mothers have been wont to regard them.

While the mortality is not particularly high, the possible complications and the after effects are most serious. Deafness, blindness, heart disease rheumatism and kidney trouble are more frequently the result of these "usual" children's diseases than of any other influence.

The ignorance of parents on this subject is woeful. It is due in large measure to the mistaken idea that physicians allow these diseases to run their course because they are but minor ailments. The fact is, however, the doctors do nothing to check their course, not because they are so trivial, but because they are so baffling. They do nothing because they know nothing.

Before the discovery of the diphtheria serum, one out of every two babies afflicted with that disease died. By the use of the serum the death rate has been reduced to less than ten per cent. Indeed, the anti-toxin is practically a sure cure if used in time.

The diphtheria anti-toxin is obtained from the horse. Unfortunately, however, horses have not been found to be susceptible to the other children's diseases, and provide no other disease-curing serum.

Monkeys have been repeatedly experimented on, but it is only just now that definite results have been obtained. Dr. Simon Flexner obtained in this way his serum for spinal meningitis, which resulted in reducing the death rate in that disease from ninety per cent to less than twenty per cent, and much progress has similarly been made in the fight against infantile paralysis, the scourge which attacked twenty thousand infants in New York State last year and left fifteen thousand cripples.

Now Dr. John F. Anderson, director of the Government Hygiene Laboratory at Washington, has ascertained that monkeys are subject to measles. Up to the present time it had been supposed, and was accepted as fact, that man was the only animal capable of contracting this disease.

The discovery signifies that a "serum" can be prepared from the blood of monkeys that have recovered from measles, which serum, when introduced by hypodermic injection into the veins of a human being, will act as a cure for the malady, or will even render the person thus treated immune to the disease. In fact, such a serum is already being prepared for purposes of experimentation. It corresponds in character to the "anti-toxin" already used so successfully in cases of diphtheria.

An epidemic of measles in the city of Washington last Spring gave Dr. Anderson a good opportunity to make some experiments with monkeys. On April 28 he took a small quantity of blood from a vein at the elbow of a nurse, sick with measles at the Government Hospital for the Insane, and with it inoculated three rhesus monkeys, called No. 7, No. 40 and No. 12. All three, a few days later, showed signs of fever, and in one of them (No. 12) an eruption appeared on the face, brows, chin and eyelids. This was followed by a fine branny scaling over the parts affected.

Two more monkeys—Nos. 6 and 8 were inoculated with blood from another case of measles, and, at the same time, No. 12 received a fresh inoculation. In ten days No. 6 showed signs of fever and developed a hacking cough, with an eruption in irregular patches on the chest and abdomen. No. 8 became feverish in eight days and a well-marked eruption appeared over its chest, abdomen, back and limbs.

Monkey No. 12, however, this time remained wholly unaffected. It had been rendered immune by the previous attack of the complaint. On the other hand, not only did Nos. 6 and 8 show all the symptoms of measles as above described, but the disease was transmitted from them by inoculation with their blood to four other monkeys, and from the latter, by the same means, to still others.

The susceptibility of monkeys to measles has thus been absolutely proved. Hence a serum can be hunted which will produce immunity to the complaint in human beings, or act as a cure for it. The only doubt at present is whether a sufficient quantity of the measles anti-toxin can be obtained for general use by physicians.

The germ of measles has never been found. Very likely it is too small to be seen even with a high-power microscope. There is no question, however, that the disease is caused by germs, which are scattered through the medium of discharges from the nose, throat and eyes—not, as is commonly supposed, by scales of falling skin. The sufferer always has a "cold," with fits of sneezing.

It is one of the most contagious of known diseases, but is to a great extent preventable. Realizing that the patient is a dangerous source of infection, utmost care should be taken to isolate the case—just as though it were smallpox. A child suffering from the malady should be rigidly quarantined. Unfortunately, the method usually adopted is one of reckless exposure. If a young person develops measles, any other children in the house are allowed to catch it. "They have got to have it some time," say the parents, "and they might as well go through with it now and be done with it."

The truth is, that with proper precautions there is no good reason why most children should contract measles. But if they are to have it, the longer it can be postponed the better, because it is much more likely to be fatal in the very early years of life.

Another "children's disease" that is very fatal—far more so than is generally imagined—is whooping cough. It causes thirty per cent of all deaths of children under one year. An infant attacked by it is unable to eat, vomiting every time it coughs.

It is an infection of the lungs. A child suffering from it gives several coughs, and then, out of breath, fills its lungs with a long inspiration, which produces the sound called "whoop."

Fortunately, Professor Bordet, of Brussels, has newly discovered the germ of whooping cough, and claims to have produced the disease by inoculation in cats and monkeys. He has already made a serum to cure it and will prepare a "vaccine" which may be even more effective. A vaccine is obtained by breeding the germs in beef broth and then killing them by heating the latter to boiling point. The fluid thus prepared, which contains in large quantities the specific poison manufactured by the microbes, is used for inoculation.

The most fatal of all diseases of childhood (if measles be excepted) is scarlet fever. It is actually much more deadly than measles, of course, but fortunately less common. There are likely to be kidney complications, and the ears are often affected, permanent deafness following.

Again in this case no germ has been found, but within the last three months it has been discovered that monkeys are susceptible to the malady, being inoculated by spraying their throats with a fluid containing scrapings from the throat of a human patient. In all likelihood, by the way, the infection of scarlet fever is carried by discharges from the nose and throat—sore throat being a characteristic symptom.

This discovery will make practicable the preparation of a specific serum (from monkey blood) for the cure of scarlet fever.

The so-called children's diseases are thus termed because nearly everybody has some or all the three in childhood, and, being thereby rendered immune, people are rarely attacked by them later in life. As the matter is now understood, the cells of the body, when the latter is invaded by germs of any malady, such as measles or scarlet fever, start in to manufacture quantities of a suitable anti-poison with which to fight the intruders. And, when recovery has been accomplished, they go on making that anti-poison for the rest of one's life, thus producing a continued immunity.

The blood of a monkey that has recovered from measles is full of the anti-poison for that disease. Hence, when introduced into the circulation of a human being, it neutralizes the hostile action of any measles germs that may be present. This is exactly the principle on which the serum used for the control of diphtheria operates. Repeated small doses of diphtheria germs are given to a horse by inoculation, until the blood of the animal is heavily loaded with the specific anti-poison. Some of this blood is then drawn out by tapping a vein, and, when the red part has had time to settle to the bottom of the receptacle containing it, the watery poison is poured off from the top. This is the diphtheria serum or "anitoxin."

What has been accomplished with diphtheria is certainly most encouraging. It suggests that in future generations it may be practicable to render children immune to such complaints as measles, whooping-cough and scarlet fever by the use of specific serums and vaccines. At all events, these maladies certain to become less and less common, and may be gradually eliminated. They will come to be regarded as rare, and, to a great extent, as preventable.

"Measles is the most contagious of all the eruptive diseases of childhood," said Dr. Ernst J. Lederle, Health Commissioner of New York, "and is the cause of so many deaths in young children that it becomes a matter of great importance that extreme care should be used in all the details of its management.

"Because one child in a family contracts the disease is no reason why his brothers and sisters should be allowed to get it. The first child may escape without serious after-effects, the next may be rendered blind or deaf for life.

"The same is true of whooping-cough and scarlet fever. Do not look slightingly upon these too common affections. Although comparatively harmless in themselves, the possible complications are numerous and most dangerous, while blindness and deafness and even more serious afflictions may be the direct outcome."

an interminable pile of bones. This picture would seem a better illustration of polar exploration.

We see "The Pest" as a spectre that goes flying through the world, picking its victims at random in every locality. "Hunger" is a mad rider that pursues humanity.

The approach of death is symbolized by a drawing in which the hands of a clock chop off the heads of miserable men, which occupy the position of the hours.

"Knowledge" is a strange fantasy, in which a brutal ape tramples over the body of a dead scientist. In "The Best Physician" death is cruelly represented by a figure which conveys a grotesque suggestion of medical attention.

Perhaps the strangest work of all is that which shows a stone man with the head of an ostrich, looking round upon a dreary wilderness. This is how the end and aim of life appear to the artist-philosopher.

SHOULD WE PUT AN EXPORT TARIFF ON OUR HEIRESSES?

Two Congressmen Explain Why the Loss of a Billion Dollars Every Ten Years in the "Purchase" of Titled Husbands Prompts Them to Demand Governmental Regulation of the "Business"

SHOULD American heiresses who marry abroad and carry with them substantial parts of American fortunes, made in America be subject to a heavy export tariff?

Within the last few weeks two members of Congress, Mr. Kahn, of California, and Mr. Sabath, of Illinois, have made speeches advocating such a tax. The latter has gone so far as to introduce a resolution bearing upon this purely financial side of the American problem of matrimony.

It is admitted that there are not so many foreign marriages as formerly, but the Congressmen do not believe that this is due to any awakening of a patriotic desire to keep American fortunes in the United States.

It is not denied that the engagement of Miss Mildred Sherman, one of the famous Sherman twins, and an heiress worth possibly twenty-five to thirty million dollars, to Lord Camoys, the chum of Lord Decies, who took away Vivien Gould, will lead to a renewal of these restrictive efforts. Here Congressman Sabath and Congressman Kahn tell just why they want the export tax.

Why We Need an Heiress Tax

By Congressman A. J. Sabath, of Illinois.

WE are squandering more than $100,000,000 annually in the purchase of titled foreign husbands for our American girls—this sum being understood to include what is spent abroad in the business of hunting for them. Occasionally—as in certain recent and very conspicuous instances—the noblemen, attracted by baits of extraordinary richness, have condescended to come to this country for the purpose of picking them up, but as a rule, they are not obliged to take so much trouble.

At the rate I have mentioned, the purchase of foreign titles for our girls costs us more than a billion dollars every ten years. That is an immense amount of money. Can even so rich a country as ours stand such a drain? The money goes to England or to the Continent, and is lost to us forever. None of it ever comes back.

Most of the very big fortunes in this country are new fortunes. The women whose husbands have made these fortunes nearly always develop social ambitions, and too commonly their utmost desire is to marry their daughters to men of title.

It inevitably happens that Americans who go title-hunting in Europe are laughed at and spoken of behind their backs as "bounders"—especially by the nobility and other aristocratic folk who enjoy their hospitality and borrow their money. But this is only one of many forms of humiliation to which they are exposed. Unfortunately, the business brings ridicule upon our country, and that is a pity.

What is needed is a heavy tax on all moneys that go from America to Europe through international marriages. Congress would certainly pass a bill, similar to one I introduced in the Fifty-ninth Congress, relating to the matter, if it could be framed in such a way as to be constitutional and at the same time effective. The difficulty will be overcome, however.

I have been informed—whether correctly or not I cannot say—that the Vanderbilts came near losing control of one of their railroads in consequence of the marriage of Gladys to a needy Hungarian Count. That little matrimonial event brought about the transfer of about $12,000,000 in substantial securities from the United States to Hungary. The money represented property built up by American hard work. The Count, who probably hasn't done a stroke of anything useful for seventeen generations at least, annexed the whole of it for the price of a marriage license.

The views that I have expressed on this subject accurately reflect those of a majority of my fellow Representatives in Congress—so much so, indeed, that the House would certainly pass a bill relating to the matter, if it could be framed in such a way as to be constitutional and at the same time effective. To meet requirements of constitutionality in the case is not so easy, inasmuch as Congress has no power to tax things that go out of the country, and our American heiresses are exports.

The difficulty will be overcome, however. What is needed, obviously, is a heavy tax on all moneys that go from America to Europe through international marriages. There are various ways in which this might be accomplished, the simplest, perhaps, being to impose a tax upon dowries. Such a tax might be established on a graduated scale, so that the percentage claimed by the treasury would increase with the size of the fortune thus sent across the ocean.

The problem is exceedingly complex, inasmuch as the principal item of loss is not through the payment of dowries. There are, to begin with, enormous expenses incidental to title-hunting campaigns in Europe. Palatial houses in city and country must be rented and maintained; entertaining of a most lavish description must be done; and it commonly happens that heavy sums must be paid for introductions to the nobility and invitations to the houses of titled families. There are at the present time in England many persons of unquestioned social position who earn a living, or add largely to their incomes, by this sort of business.

Much of the $100,000,000 or so which we pay annually for titles goes in this way. But the largest item of all in the account is the inheritances which, through international marriages, pass over from America to Europe. Take, for example, the case of an American citizen who has spent his life in accumulating $30,000,000 or $40,000,000.

There are plenty of such fortunes nowadays in this country. He has a couple of attractive daughters, and he pays two foreign noblemen, one a French marquis and the other a Russian prince (both much in need of the ready cash), $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 apiece to marry them. But a few years later, the old man dies, and the bulk of his huge fortune is divided between the two girls—to be sent across the water and squandered in Europe by their husbands in gambling and on other women. This is not a picture of what might occur; it describes something that is happening all the time.

When the titled husband has been secured at such great cost in money and trouble, disillusionment in a vast majority of instances comes only too quickly to the American-born wife. She may even discover—and this has happened time and time again—that her marriage, though valid in the United States, is of no account in her husband's country. There she is merely his mistress in the eyes of the law.

If he is a Frenchman, she soon learns that husbands in France do not expect, and are not expected, to be faithful to their wives. She is likely to have the pleasure of seeing her own money spent lavishly on other women, and she has no redress. Supposing she has married an Italian. She can get no divorce, no matter what her husband does. One such case came recently to my knowledge, where an American-born lady was kept, and still is kept, a prisoner by her Italian husband on his estate. Meanwhile he has squandered the whole of her fortune.

Is it not time that something was done to interfere with this mischievous traffic? We are at the present time paying to European holders over $200,000,000 annually in interest and dividends on American stocks and bonds, most of the capital represented having been acquired by its foreign owners through marriages with the daughters of our millionaires.

Sooner or later we shall get some effective legislation on the subject. Nearly four years ago I introduced in the House a resolution, meant to be merely tentative, that "all gifts, dowries, settlements, or advances of money or property, made in consideration or in contemplation of marriage, whether paid or delivered, or intended to be paid or delivered before or after the actual solemnization of such marriage, by any citizen of the United States of America, to any person other than a citizen of the United States, shall be subject to a tax of twenty-five per cent of the total amount of any such gift, dowry, settlement, or advance, and such tax shall be paid into the United States Treasury."

"Curb the Title Barterers"

By Congressman Julius Kahn, of California.

(From a speech in the House of Representatives.)

I THINK we are all in accord on this subject of so-called international marriages. I wish a way could be devised for taxing the dowries of American brides in these matrimonial ventures, so that the titled fortune-hunter might secure but a small moiety of the price the bride pays him for a name which he dishonors by thus putting it up at auction to the highest bidder.

It is a fact open to the notice of everybody that within the present generation no European nobleman has married a poor American girl. There is absolutely no exception to this rule. The price counted down must be paid, else the bargain is off.

A second fact, equally open to observation, is that no daughter of a foreign nobleman ever marries an American man.

A third fact, most striking of all, is that few very rich American girls marry American men. Exceptions to this rule are so rare as to excite, when they occur, wide-spread attention and even astonishment.

It is inevitable that such marriages between American young women and foreign noblemen should in a great majority of instances turn out badly. How could it be otherwise when they are merely a matter of bargain and sale?

THE PLEASED KAISER—"Two weeks in the tower for you!" (To His Son's Wife.)

THE ANGRY KAISER—"Away with those anti-fat poisons!" (To His Own Wife.)

SUCH IS LIFE WHERE THE KAISER IS "BOSS"

His Son's Wife Spends Two Weeks in a Tower for Wearing an Actress' Hat, and He Won't Let His Own Wife Take Any More Anti-Fat Medicine!

The German Empress Whose Health Has Been Ruined by Fat Reducing Drugs.

Berlin, Aug. 17.

GERMANS all over the world see in the cabled news of the Empress Augusta Victoria's latest illness, complicated by heart weakness, cause for real anxiety. They know that the attacks of heart trouble that have been bothering the Empress for several years are becoming more frequent and more severe.

There is no longer any doubt that the Empress Augusta Victoria, beloved of the Kaiser and by the whole German nation, has ruined her health through drastic efforts to reduce her weight—too vigorous massage, poisonous reducing drugs and the "death grip" corset have transformed a woman of noble beauty and bounding vitality into a pain-racked, nervous and prematurely aged victim of fraudulent means of "keeping young and beautiful."

Possibly not too late, though, the Kaiser, learning the truth, has ordered his wife to "throw away those anti-fat poisons."

There was a period when women's generous proportions, within certain restrictions, were all the rage in Germany and in the Continental capitals. For a person of the Empress' height to weight between 150 and 160 pounds was considered eu regle.

Then the Acstas happened to visit at the Berlin Palace. The Duchess Letetia was only twenty-two at the time, a beauty of the first rank. While slender to a degree, she lacked not that fullness of figure that William admired most in his own wife. She fascinated him. One or twice he expressed admiration for her style of beauty. The Empress's jealousy was aroused. The Acstas left Berlin abruptly, ten hours before the appointed time. That evening the Empress called a council of her Dames of the Palace.

The Grand Mistress, Countess Brockdorff, presided; others present were Baroness von Haake, Countess Keller and the wardrobe women, Frau Schwerdtfeger and Fraulein Glein.

The Empress tearfully told her female ministers that His Majesty was finding fault with her figure, and that she herself had considered it "unfashionable" for some time past.

"Nothing but a long waist and slender bust will please His Majesty now," she said, "and such I must secure in the shortest possible time."

Countess Brockdorff recalled a newspaper article telling of a famous and exceedingly skillful beauty doctor, Madam Scheibner, who had succeeded in ridding a well-known Berlin actress of fifty pounds superfluous overweight.

Augusta Victoria was elated. Despite the grand mistress's protests, a telegram commanded Madam Scheibner to report at the palace at 11 o'clock next morning.

Augusta Victoria, being so anxious to please her lord, submitted to massage twice daily. At the same time she accepted a new French corsetmaker, a builder of stays that became known as the "death-grip."

And between "death-grip" and the manipulations of the beauty doctor the once stately Empress lost flesh daily to her great delight and satisfaction.

But, strange to say, while the Kaiser admired the "new figure" in his cousin german, the sprightly Countess Charlotte von Hohenau, in Madam de Penafiel, in Frau von Kotze and other beauties of the court, he failed to compliment the Empress' "improved" appearance. As a matter of fact, he though it an indication of ill-health.

One afternoon William, impatient at his wife's delay, strayed into her dressing room, and observing the great array of bottles and platters filled with toilet waters, medicines and cures-for-all, cried:

Then, learning the cause of his Empress's decline in health and beauty, he ordered:

"Away with these anti-fat poisons!"

Court gossip has it that the Empress used iodine for years internally, because of that drug's reputed flesh-devouring propensities. Iodine is an irritant poison—no wonder Her Majesty's heart became affected.

Is it too late that the Kaiser—unquestioned ruler in his own family—has stopped these fatal practises?

Fraulein Sari von Petrasz, Actress, Wearing the Hat That Made All the Trouble.

Two Weeks in a Tower for Her Royal Highness (By Order of the Kaiser)

BECAUSE she tried on the tantalizingly attractive cart wheel hat of a popular soubrette, Princess Alexandra Victoria, wife of the Kaiser's fourth son, Prince Augustus, has been "doing time" in the English Gothic round tower of Castle Bibelsiene.

Countess Alexandra van Wedel, her maid of honor, was the royal Alexandra's prison companion. There were two maids to wait upon them, and aside from these attendants they saw no one and were seen by none.

"Won't your imperial and royal majesty let me have my bow-wow," pleaded Victoria Alexandra.

"No," replied the Kaiser by telegram from Kiel.

"Or my polly?" wired her royal highness.

"No," said the stern William.

"Then my canary bird?"

And William telegraphed: "No, no no—the princess is to be treated like any other prisoner, except that she is given a companion and servants, as her rank demands."

The round tower is the tallest of the ten useless royal residences, rising seven stories in the air, quite an altitude in Potsdam. Ordinarily it connects with the rest of the structure through doors east and west, but by order of the Kaiser the doors were locked, and the keys were turned over to General von Plessen, commander of royal headquarters.

Sentinels guarded the connecting doors, and the lawn in front of the tower was hopelessly ruined by another brace of sentinels marching up and down, twenty-four hours each day, loaded rifle on shoulder, during the Princess's period of incarceration.

It came about this way. Prince Augustus, being an ambitious young man, had given up his vacation to pursue administrative studies in the Ministry of the Interior. He left Potsdam at 9 o'clock in the morning and returned only for dinner. Consequently the princess got lonesome, and one afternoon, to surprise him, went to Berlin unannounced in the hope of finding her husband in his office. But he had gone—no one knew where—saying, when he left, "he would make a night of it."

Alexandra Victoria dismissed her royal carriage and hired a taxi. She was going to find Gus, if she could, and have a good time searching for him in the bargain.

"Let's see if any of the royal theatres are open," said Alexandra Victoria to her companions.

Good, the heat hadn't closed the Neues. "We will claim the royal box, and if we find Gus in it so much the better."

And to the Neues Theatre they went, and the manager was only too glad to turn over to the ladies the royal box, long empty.

During the opening scenes of the first act the Princess was chiefly interested in looking for her husband and in speculating on what that wicked young man might be doing, but soon continued and boisterous applause riveted her attention upon the centre of the stage, held by the impersonator of the title role, Fraulein Sari von Petrasz.

Sari is a comely young woman and as sprightly as any come out of the Fatherland. She wore some bewitching finery, but, oh, the hat she had on!

The Princess was all eyes, and her eyes saw nothing but hat, hat, hat, and again hat!

When the curtain was about to fall, the manager came in to inquire how Her Royal Highness enjoyed the piece.

"Glorious," cried Alexandra Victoria. "Never saw such a beautiful hat in my life. It's the hat of hats and I'm going to have one like it if it takes a month's appenage."

She added quickly: "Command that young woman—what's-her-name to wait upon me instantly, but not without the hat."

The manager retired and a minute later, in the ante-room of the royal box the smiling Sari made a court bow to Alexandra Victoria, the rim of her hat touching the carpet.

She made Sari put down the address of the maker and the price in the little note book she carried in her gold purse and then she asked permission—a princess asked permission! Mark the sentence—to try on the wonder-hat just for a second. Of course Sari dismantled her upper parts in a jiffy, and as quickly decorated Alexandra Victoria with the wonder-hat.

First Hints of the Unusual and Beautiful Fashions for Fall

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishment is at No. 17 West Thirty-sixth street, New York.

By Lady Duff-Gordon ("Lucile")

HERE I am giving you a peek at my advance models for the Fall. In many I have emphasized the Oriental note stronger than ever. This wonderful Eastern toilette is astonishingly effective. It is all in the weird Indian colorings which blend together into that restful, beautiful harmony of the Orient.

The outer wrap is really a modification of the Sarong. It is in one large piece and falls gracefully from the head and shoulders down, and then is draped closely—but not so closely as to interfere with walking—about the knees. It is wonderfully, as I say, restful and graceful. I see no reason why our women should not benefit by the charms of Eastern raiment.

Here is a dainty little combination of chiffon and fur which I designed for charming Lily Elsie. It is just a little late Summer gown, immensely simple, but with a touch of the Orient in its lines instead of in its colorings.

Color will be more in evidence than ever this season. Colors taken from temples and palaces of the Orient, from old dreams of the glories of Babylon! The world is returning to a knowledge and love of color in life. The gray days are passing in dress!

So much for generalities; and now for some gowns which I have been making during the past week for two of our society leaders; one which I have named "The Hidden Garden" is of marquisette in the soft green of leaves massed together in the cool depths of a wood, and lining this filmy fabric is silk in that gray blue which one sees in a Summer mist at evening, this latter and lovely coloring being brought into outward prominence just between the tunic and the underskirt. The silken broideries on corsage and tunic also blend the most subtle shadings of green and gray and blue, and floating at one side is a scarf of gray chiffon. The mist, deepened and materialized, you see! On the corsage the semi-transparency of the green marquisette merges eventually into a still more elusive softness of gray and then of flesh-pink chiffon, and just faintly visible through the filmy veiling are inner and dainty details of cobwebby lace, threaded through with satiner blue satin ribbon and other lace tinted to the gray blue coloring. And it is on this that the "hidden garden" blooms out—clusters of little flowers—blue and pink and mauve, with foliage of tenderest green, all caught together with loops of silken ribbon, which introduce the first and only touches of definitely bright colorings—emerald green, mauve and rose.

Quite a contrast is the other afternoon gown of Chinese yellow, satin charmeuse, whose little turn-over collar of embroidered lawn and lace falls into a chemisette of flesh-pink chiffon, over which the charmeuse is caught together by a fine cord of gold with tassels of purple and blue.

Truly it is a joy to be able to give full scope to one's love for beautiful colors and fabrics. I am looking forward to the delight of showing you other of my new models for a season which is to achieve a record in the way of festivities and functions.

The Mystery of the Fatherless Frog

QUITE the newest marvel of science is the development of a frog from a tadpole born of an unfertilized egg—in fact, a "fatherless frog."

This is the application on a higher plane of animal life of the principle discovered by Professor Loeb—which was the scientific sensation of a few years ago—that the artificial puncture of the unfertilized egg of a sea urchin—the lowest form of animal life—was sufficient to bring about the phenomenon of reproduction of the species.

The apparent result of this experiment was to show that the mother is "the race," that mechanical means enable the father to be done away with, that the only necessary function of the male element in reproduction is to insure a certain kind and extent of rupture of the virgin substance of the ovum, or egg.

Writing on the application of this principle to the eggs of frogs, Sir Ray Lankester, K. C. B., F. R. S., the famous English naturalist, affirms that the claim made a year ago by M. Bataillon, has been confirmed by another French naturalist, M. Hennequy, who, therefore, may properly be said to share the honor of being father to the "Fatherless Frog."

To explain this discovery, a few words as to well-known facts are necessary. It is well known that if we isolate a female frog at the egg-laying season and let her swim in perfectly pure filtered water, and proceed to deposit some of her eggs in that water the eggs will not germinate; they remain unchanged for a time, and then decompose, become, in fact, "rotten."

It is a matter of common knowledge that it is necessary for the eggs to be "fertilized" in order that they may start on that series of changes and growth which we call "development," and become tadpoles and eventually young frogs. The "fertilization" of the frog's eggs is effected in ordinary condition by the presence in the water of the pond into which the female sheds them of microscopic sperm-filaments (often called spermatozoa, or simply "sperms") which are shed into the water at the same time by the male frog.

The egg (the blackish-brown spherical body, as big as a rapeseed, which is embedded in a thin jelly, and is familiar to those who are drawn by curiosity to look into the waters of wayside ponds in Spring) is a single cell or corpuscle of protoplasm distended with dark-colored and other granules of nutrient substance.

A single sperm (though requiring the microscope to render it visible) is also a single cell. It is a minute oval body, with a long serpentine tail of actively undulating protoplasm. Hundreds of thousands of these are shed into the water at the breeding season by the male frog. One is enough to fertilize the egg. The sperm-cells swim in the water, and are chemically attracted by the eggs. As there are so many sperms, one of them is sure to reach each black egg-sphere. It drives its way into the substance of the egg, making a minute hole in its surface; then the protoplasm of the sperm fuses with the protoplasm of the egg, and becomes intimately mixed with it.

The egg is thereupon said to be "fertilized"—that is to say, "rendered fertile." It at once commences to move. Its surface ripples and contracts and nips in deeply, so that the sphere is marked out into two hemispheres. The little mass elongates, increases in size, and gradually assumes the form of a young tadpole.

The recent discovery of M. Bataillon is this, viz., that you can make the frog's egg develop in a perfectly regular way and become a tadpole and then a young frog without the admission to it of a sperm-filament or of any substance derived from the male frog.

All you have to do—and the operation, though it sounds easy and simple, is an exceedingly delicate and difficult one—is to prick with a fine needle the surface of the little black egg-sphere (not merely of the jelly surrounding it) when it is shed by the female frog into perfectly pure water free from sperms or anything of the sort. The slight artificial puncture acts as does the natural puncture by the swimming sperm-filament, and is sufficient!

The egg proceeds to develop quite regularly. There is no fusion of the nucleus of the egg-cell with any matter from the outside; no paterna. "material" is introduced, but the nucleus of the egg-cell divides just as though there had been! The whole progeny of cells, successively formed, are the pure offspring of the maternal egg-cell and its nucleus.

The tadpoles and young frogs so produced are examples of what is called "parthenogenesis"—that is to say, virginal reproduction—reproduction without fertilization by material derived from a male parent! The needle which gives off no material, but simply makes a tiny break in the surface of the egg, does all that is necessary!

There are questions of great interest still to be made out as the result of his discovery. Can the fatherless brood be reared to maturity and again made to yield a fatherless generation? What is the precise structure of the nuclei of the cells, which originate from the nucleus of the egg-cell only, and not from a nucleus formed by the fusion of that with a sperm-cell nucleus? These and similar questions are the motive of further careful study now in progress

"ISN'T IT DREADFUL!

BYRON'S BEEN LEFT ANOTHER MILLION"

What a Warning for Madeleine Force in This Plight of Grace La Rue, Who Just Can't Shake Off the Burden of Her Husband's Inexorably Waxing Wealth!

If You Could Only Have Seen with What Wistful Delight Mr. Powers Drew This!

"M love," said Byron Chandler, hesitating miserably, "my grandmother has died and left me another million."

"Oh, what shall we do?" said Grace La Rue, his wife "Isn't it dreadful, Byron?"

Thereupon the two unfortunates set about making plans to lighten the honorable golden shackles which Miss La Rue thought were fettering her love and which Mr. Chandler believed it was no ungenerous and unknightly of him to acquire.

And this at the very time when a certain portion of America is waiting over the heights of girls marrying rich men! What a warning to Madeleine Force! And what a sermon upon the horror of wealth! Oh, the misery of having millions dropping in upon your husband all the time just as cousins in a country village!

Grace La Rue is the charming American musical comedy actress who, two years ago, married Byron Chandler, son of the late George Byron Chandler, millionaire banker of Manchester, N. H. at the time of his marriage Chandler, who had inherited a great fortune from his grandfather, was generally known as a "young man about town."

Young Mr. Chandler had always shown remarkable and picturesque ingenuity in getting the worth of his money. When he first came to New York he met Wilson Mizner, the versatile playwright and Alaskan survivor. Mr. Mizner advised Mr. Chandler to make a preliminary investment by buying a New York hotel. They bought it, guess and all. But Mr. Chandler and Mr. Mizner formed a habit of personally conducted election parties of guests they did not like. The guests objected and soon Mr. Chandler, hurted by his prejudices, gave up the hotel. He went abroad, pursued Miss La Rue vigorously, and married her.

In spite of marriage and her husband's millions, Mrs. Chandler remained on the stage. Miss Chandler is really ambitious and is a remarkable fine actress.

"I love the stage," said Miss La Rue, "and a little thing like a millionaire husband must not be allowed to interfere with my professional career." She was quite determined and her husband believed. It was folly a year before the unhappy pair could adjust their wealth with their ideals and circumstances.

They bought some automobiles and took a big house in Mount Vernon, New York. Mrs. Chandler hired several secretaries to take care of the letters that came to her from ambitious playwrights with plays to pay, to people who wanted to sell their theatres, and so on.

And still the found that the great notices which she used to receive for herself, notices which were fair criticisms of her ability, now only mentioned that she was the "actress wife of Byron Chandler, the million-dollar kid."

"Your fortune will prove my fall-ure, Byron," she complained to her husband. "What are we going to do about it?"

Mr. Chandler did the best he could. But, being in love with his wife and having sowed his wild oats before his marriage and as his wife insisted upon supporting herself from her own earnings, the best was not much.

Nevertheless, they did manage to get along fairly happily despite the fact that Mr. Chandler is rich.

Picture, then, Miss La Rue's joy at the library of her Mount Vernon home when she reading all about Colonel Astor going to marry Miss Force, and the really dreadful indignation of Dr. Richmond, of Philadelphia.

"Poor girl!" she exclaimed, wiping away a tear. "Poor little girl! She little knows what she is going up against. She little dreams that when she is called with the gods of the Astors, people will always

"But the worst feature of it all is that new misery threatens my theatrical prospects. I feel that I have been set back just a million dollars, and, believe me, that is some setback."

"You cannot imagine how we feel toward this new burden," said Mr. Chandler. "My wife will have her trouble with the managers all over again. The newspapers will play up as again as the million-dollar kids while my wife's theatrical career will wither for lack of proper publicity."

"We have bought automobiles, we have lived well three tips on the races, nice tips which we played to highsnity in the pond hope that they would be fine all right then, really we could have received some very valuable suggestions on how best to spend the rest of our money. But we have decided to get rid of it would be folly this advice. But who can tell? One man writes me from Texas that he has invested in some sugars for removing all the dirty grim and needles lying around, and he only needs a million dollars to put his plan into execution. This looks well, but suppose the venture proves successful. Heroes! Another chap is proposing has a plan to make day into night and night into day. It will only cost a million. Failure seems almost assured, and yet I fear success.

"What can I do? I hate to be an incumbrance to my wife in this way, but my relatives will die, you know, and there is nothing to be done by her exploiting me unless they will want to."

Clara M[illegible]orris Discusses the [illegible]ing Question Raised by the C[illegible]ol. Astor-Madeleine Fo[illegible]rce Engagement.

By Clara Morris.

Will being the silly season, enter the satirical skit called the Astor-Force wedding? And here is the entire public eagerly watching the performance, and most of them cry out upon it.

Comes a voice out of Philadelphia! Lanped like a leviathan, spitting and surging as fierce as new milk, the Rev. Dr. Richmond irremovable rector, and he may thank his stars for that—

Also that American maidenhood is more of the traction kind and American motherhood more of the calculating kind—is whipping her daughters to be in the slave market. Colonel Astor is not the only one in this country: "She is being sold: "She is not being sold!" "They ought to be ashamed!" "The daughters are married—forestalling the fairydale by at least a month and everything quiet as are useful a chorus!

Oh, my sisters, of the thousands of you who are crying out upon Madeleine Force, some of you are divorced, but there are many more of you, any one of whom would spit her bobbie pacers in her wild rage to the altar and Colonel Astor—if he had only asked you!

Is the Colonel a sinner? If so, the more reason for your church to keep the doors open to him. Is his sin that of having money? If so, are you all sinners in your degree.

And how is it fair to be abusive to the Astor fiancee? Young you cannot be expected to see clearly through a glittering rain of gold! And then, like the crystal gazer, she has looked so long into the white fire of her diamond engagement ring perhaps she has become self-hypnotized. With hamma'ed pops and sister peering admiringly into their ears, she was in a kind of smiling daze.

Papa says daughter loves her future lord. Perhaps she believes what papa says. But if the elderly Mr. Astor had been an old friend of papa's with some fifty thousand dollars to the good, tramping himself all day over a rocky mountain, shooting at a stray partridge for daughter's dinner, and he had proposed marriage to daughter, her many months do you suppose would have elapsed before Page Force and Mr. Astor became friends again?

Of course, it is the Midas touch that tells. All the world's auxiliary system is made of gold. And gold is not such a bad thing to hold. It moves obstacles, levels mountains, runs great enterprises, has power. Presumably no one would object to a girl sickness, beautiful, a trifle shallow perhaps, marrying a man thirty years her senior, who had forty million vulgar dollars to lay about him all the time to do as he pleased with. But mint electricity is not gold and at once would come the outcry. And yet how would the situation be changed?

Add how could one logically argue that because the mother of this pretty little simpleton marries her to an elderly gentleman with the forty million vulgar dollars of electricity, presumably for the electricity alone, that every mother in society or out of it is selling her daughter on the block, as the saying recently has it? Insert says, for the highest electrical owning gentleman who will take her with his money. My wife is a member of Parliament, and some meat be eaten. Here we have the classic family situation.

Finally, I cannot tell whether Dr. Richmond is making his outcry out of pure horror of a contemplated sinful and illegal action or whether he has an exceptionally keen appreciation of the benefits of publicity. As to the dreadful charges he has brought against my own sex I bow my head in shame and admit that they are all too true. Of course, individual instances it is true that many of our women, and, worse still, many of our girls, are unnecessarily envious, immodest and unchaste. But while the reverend doctor has spoken the truth, he has not spoken the whole truth.

For all over this great land there are many women and girls in their splendid thousands who are sweet and strong and noble and womanly, whose daily lives are hard work and whose only reward is to live as it is done by the light of Love.

I am afraid that the reverend doctor has on his colors with a palette knife; that he overrides the bounds!

What is the exact standard Madeleine Force and Colonel Astor? Is it any that one knows? Is it the standard of the Egyptians, or reveal and heavenly of such sweet fragrance? Or is it the standard of the Greeks who were just as the Oriental hucksters displays his rugs and gowns with surpassing devotion and those maids of temper are to be Dead Sea fruit, because the ashes will be found dry and very bitter in her powdery throat.

For there is an ennui, no wonder you are sold into marital slavery.

The world of fashion is a more marriage mart than that of old Babylon, in which the most beautiful of our American girls are set on show.

The time has come when the law must interfere to protect the youth of the country.

Miss Clara Morris, the Distinguished American Actress, Who Discusses Here the Headline's Problem.

"There is no weariness on earth as deadly as having nothing in the world to wish for."

With her husband, for every possible or pretense to life is an old story to him.

Why, then, if life has come to her, that deadliest of all fates that follows on a success so heavenly clear and modern and that followed by sweet amaze and wonder, even then all will be all to him, and bitterly she must acknowledge: "Ah! the first tiny cry he heard was from another woman's child!"

Oh, do not envy this young girl her future. For the time may come when her greatest pleasure will consist in arousing the envy of another woman. What a life! Pity her!

So think, if you will! But it occurs to me that I read day by day reports of many divorce trials, dozens of divorce cases started in which the names were not Astor, Vanderbilt or Biddle, or those which have the full-bloom of what is called the American aristocracy. Indeed, it comes to me that there were double and Jonsons and Browns in multitudes. Not overflowing with riches, but the jaded scent of the world, but artisans, Mechanicville, even tenth dozens, the people who are the backbone of the country, not the social glory of the Dongshoe Colony of Blue Mills-on-the-Sound, or who are hobbines of the Country Club at Pebble's Hollow.

And it occurs to me that beautiful young women without much money, or with much money, have married excellently born young men of wealth, without the experience of Colonel Astor, free from the divorce court, and yet after a time the divorce scarts have known them, and their marriage is as though it never was.

But from this I do not argue that all artistocrats should not marry; that no person by the name of Smith, Jones or Brown should marry or that all the maidens who marry artistocrats of the name of Smith, Jones or Brown are sold to their Shylocks by their mothers, nor that all are affect a fine the divorce scarts have of wealth as a blackjewelry is [illegible]

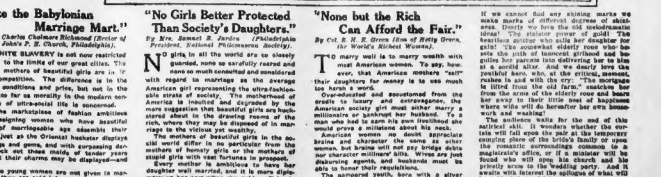
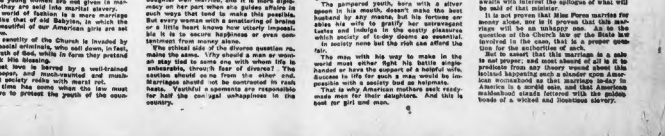
Dr. Richmond, Who Fired the First Shot in Philadelphia, Says Has Its Parallel in the Methods of Modern Society.





"Like the Babylonian Marriage Mart."

By Dr. Charles Clingman Richmond (Rector of St. John's P. E. Church, Philadelphia).

WHITE SLAVERY is not now restricted to the brothels of our great cities. The mothers of beautiful girls are in a most competitive. The difference is in the terms, conditions and price, but not in the effect, so far as morality in the modern sense is concerned, is concerned.

In the marketplace of fashion ambitious and designing women who have beautiful girls of marriageable age assemble their wares just as the Oriental hucksters displays his rugs and gowns with surpassing devotion and those maids of temper are to be sold into their chosen bondage.

Those young women are not given in marriage—they are sold into marital slavery.

The world of fashion is a more marriage mart than that of old Babylon, in which the most beautiful of our American girls are set on show.

The sanctity of the Church is invaded by those social scientists, who sail down, in fact, the wrath of God, while in form they pretend to seek His blessing.

Honest love is barred by a well-trained doorkeeper, and much-vaunted and much-decried society rocks with moral rot.

The time has come when the law must interfere to protect the youth of the country.

"No Girls Better Protected Than Society's Daughters."

NO girls in all the world are so closely guarded, none so carefully reared and none so much consulted and considered with regard to marriage as the average American girl representing the ultra-fashionable strata of society. The motherhood of America is shocked and disgusted by the mere suggestion that beautiful girls are bartered and sold in marriage to the highest bidder. Nothing of the kind is disposed of in marriage in the vicinity of Fifth avenue.

Every mother is anxious to see her daughter well married, and it is merely a question of how they should accomplish it. In such ways that tend to make this possible, but every woman with a conception of brains or a little heart knows how vitiatly impossible it is to secure happiness or even contentment from money alone.

The ethical side of the divorce question remains the same. Why should a man or woman stay tied to some one with whom life is unbearable, through fear of divorce? The caution should go no from the other end. Marriages should not be contracted in rash haste. Youthful agreements are responsible for half the conjugal unhappiness in the country.

"None but the Rich Can Afford the Fair."

By Col. E. H. R. Green (Son of Hetty Green, the Miser's Daughter).

TO marry well is to marry wealth with most American women. To my knowledge, that American mothers "sell their daughters for money is to use much too harsh a term.

It is overlooked and exonerated from the desire to luxury and extravagance, the American society girl must marry either a millionaire or bankrupt her husband. To a man who has to earn his own livelihood she would prove a millstone about his neck.

American women no doubt appreciate brains and character the same as other women, but brains will not pay bridge debts nor character millinery bills. Wives are just behind with millinery bills, and husbands must labor to honor their requisitions.

The unmarried youth, dowered with a silver spoon in his mouth, doesn't make the best husband in any sense, but his fortune enables his wife to gratify her extravagant tastes and indulge in the costly pleasures which society of to-day deems as essential to society none but the rich can afford the fair.

The man with his way to make in the world must either fight his battle single handed or have the support of a helpful wife. Success in life for such a man would be impossible with a society bud as helpmate.

That is why American mothers are ready-made men for their daughters. And this is best for girl and man.

If we cannot find any shining marks we must look to the mothers of our shiftless men. Surely we have the old tendermaiden ideal! The ancient type of mother! The heartless mother who sells her daughter for gold! The mercenary mother who besets the path of innocent girlhood and beguiles it with the glitter of gold! Is she to be found? Is she to be found among the prosperous here, who, at the critical moment, enables to her side the very girl who should be lifted from the old farm," snatches her from the arms of the lover, and carries her away to their little nest of happiness where wife will do forever after her own housework and washing!

The old-fashioned waits for the end of this satirical skit. It wonders whether the curtain will fall upon the pair at the moment of escorting plans of the bride's family or upon the romantic surroundings attendant on the magistrate's office, or if a minister will be found who will unite his vows and bless privately scene to the wedding party. And it wonders with what interest the public at last will be said of that minister.

The wedding of Miss Force marries for love or money will be the test of the Astor-Force marriage will be an unhappy one. As to the question of the Church law or the Bible being involved in the case, that is a proper question for the authorities of such.

But to assert that this marriage is a sale is not proper, and most absurd of all is it to proclaim from any theory wound about this individual happening such a slander upon American womanhood as that marriage to-day in America is a sordid sale. Nevertheless, the maidenhood stands fettered with the golden bonds of a wicked and licentious slavery.

HOW BIG THE DINOSAURS REALLY WERE.

Some Remarkable Photographs Showing What a Small Mouthful We Would Have Made for the Prehistoric Monsters

'Knee-High to a Grasshopper" Is the Way These Children Appear When Lined Up Against the Hind Legs of the Tyrannosaurus.

The Skull of the Tyrannosaurus Rex Is So Large That the Young Man in the Picture Has No Difficulty in Putting His Head Through the Eye-Socket.

TO give a more concrete idea of the prodigious size of the mammoth creatures which flourished when the earth was young, the American Museum of Natural History, New York has just completed some striking comparative photographs of the tyrannosaurus rex, the greatest of all the dinosaurs.

These pictures are here reproduced and show more eloquently than any amount of figures could how formidable the prehistoric animals were.

Tyrannosaurus rex, the last of the dinosaurs, is now being mounted in the Museum. This gigantic flesh eater was the largest beast of prey that ever lived, and the most formidable fighting animal of whom there is any record.

According to the figures he stood twenty-five feet high and was forty feet in length. The jaws, four feet long, were armed with sharply pointed teeth projecting six inches from the socket. In life, the colossal animal is estimated to have weighed fifty tons

What these proportions really signify is best shown in the pictures. Two girls are seen comfortably seated in the monster's lower jaw. Evidently they would have proved but a mere mouthful for the tyrant saurian. He could have swallowed the two at one gulp without any effort.

The height of this reptile is well indicated by another photograph which shows a little girl barely reaching half way to the monster's knee cap, while the dimensions of the huge and massive skull are revealed by the ease with which the young man in another photograph can put his head through the animal's eye socket.

The remains of the tyrannosaur were dug up in Hell Creek, in Central Montana. Part of another skeleton was found in Big Dry Creek, fifty miles south of Glasgow, Mont., in splendid preservation and perfect except that it lacked the limbs and the tip of the tail. The skull and jaws of this specimen, which is the first really complete skull of a carnivorous dinosaur known to science, is of inestimable scientific value. It is beyond question the most impressive dinosaur skull ever found.

The rock in which these skeletons were found is a loosely cemented sandstone, but the skeletons themselves are partly or wholly encased in great masses of flinty hardness. Extricating the bones unharmed from these iron-hard concretions was a slow and difficult task

The reign of the tyrannosaurus occurred at the most recent period of the Age of Reptiles, a period designated as the Cretaceous, some three million years ago. The anatomy of the skeleton displays some of the largest bones ever discovered by man.

The alert and towering tyrant-lizard ran with great agility on his two hind feet and could play frightful havoc with his savage canine teeth. The swift, two-footed "tyrant" had two huge contemporaries upon whom it undoubtedly preyed—the triceratops, a three-horned creature and the trachodon. Remains of both these animals were found with the bones of the tyrannosaurus, and it is natural to imagine that a deadly encounter of the giants marked their end. These were slow moving and herbivorous.

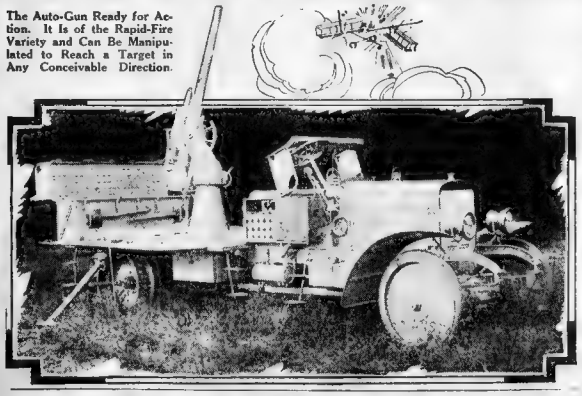
There is no living beast of prey that compares with the great carnivorous dinosaurs which habitually attacks the largest herbivorous animals. The lion and the tiger prey upon the medium-sized and smaller hoofed animals; they do not usually molest the great "pachyderms" (the elephant and the rhinoceros), and the indefinite multiplication of these giant ungulates is checked by other means. But during the Age of Reptiles it was different. The tyrannosaurus of the Cretaceous period was fitted by nature to attack and prey upon the largest of their herbivorous contemporaries, and the size and power of their weapons for attack far surpass anything seen among modern carnivores of those of the Age of Mammals.

Conversely, the largest herbivorous dinosaurs wore armor or weapons for defense much heavier and more powerful than can be found among the great pachyderms of modern times, whose thick skin is mainly a protection against accidental injury or the attacks of insects.

The great horns and bony neck drill of triceratops and the armor-plated head and body of ankylosaurus, were developed, no doubt, to resist the attacks of the huge tyrannosaur Other contemporary dinosaurs like trachodon, were unarmored, but were evidently adapted to a more amphibious life and sought refuge in swimming beyond the reach of their great enemy

Others again of much smaller size were agile and active and probably escaped by superior speed. The tyrant lizard left no descendants and, after dominating the earth for a period embracing millions of years, vanished without leaving a trace of himself in the subsequent age of mammals.

Look Out Above! Germany's New Armored Express Motor Batteries to Puncture the Battle 'Planes



The Auto-Gun Ready for Action. It Is of the Rapid-Fire Variety and Can Be Manipulated to Reach a Target in Any Conceivable Direction.

MOST of the nations realize that the next war will be fought in the air. Preparations, offensive and defensive, for this new style of conflict are being pushed as rapidly as possible.

Germany is perhaps more advanced than the other great nations in this respect. In addition to the great number of military aeroplanes with which the army is equipped, it has put into use several clever devices for the destruction of hostile aerial fleets.

One of the principal of these devices is the automobile battery manned with a specially constructed rapid-fire gun for aerial targets. The rapidity of the fighting airship, far in excess of that of any other fighting machine heretofore known, will naturally render the old-time shrapnel fuse almost useless.

The new, fast going automobile battery, it is expected, will, however, make up for the shortcomings of the Dum-Dum fuse.

The gun-crew for the automobile battery consists of five men besides the motorman. Provision is made for carrying two thousand shells. The automobile, which is mounted on solid wheels and weighs in the neighborhood of five tons, makes sixty miles an hour on a fair road

Minute Mouth Parts of the Honey Bee.

SOMEBODY once said that an enthusiastic entomologist might spend a lifetime in the investigation of the antennae of beetles This was the expression of a cynic and may have been somewhat of an exaggeration, but Professor F. Martin Duncan, the well-known English naturalist, has already spent the best part of a lifetime in the study of the most minute structures of insects, and the result of his research, set forth in a recent book, show that his work must have been most interesting.

In this work, "Our Insect Friends and Foes" author describes with the utmost detail the mouths of insect mechanism and structure. No part of the animal structure which the microscope can disclose has been overlooked, and micro-photographs give a graphic idea of how thoroughly nature fits even the part of her creatures for the mode of life to which they are consigned.

How the spider weaves its web is also treated of by the author. The spider first forms the outermost or foundation lines of its web, it appears, attaching them to surrounding objects.

Some remarkable micro-photographs of the so-called Ghost or Phantom larva, the larva of corethra, were made by Professor Duncan and are here reproduced The larva frequents still pools shaded by overhanging trees and devours the small larvae of gnats, flies and tiny crustaceans. The beautiful fan of feathered bristles, shown in one of the pictures, is used to propel it through the water.

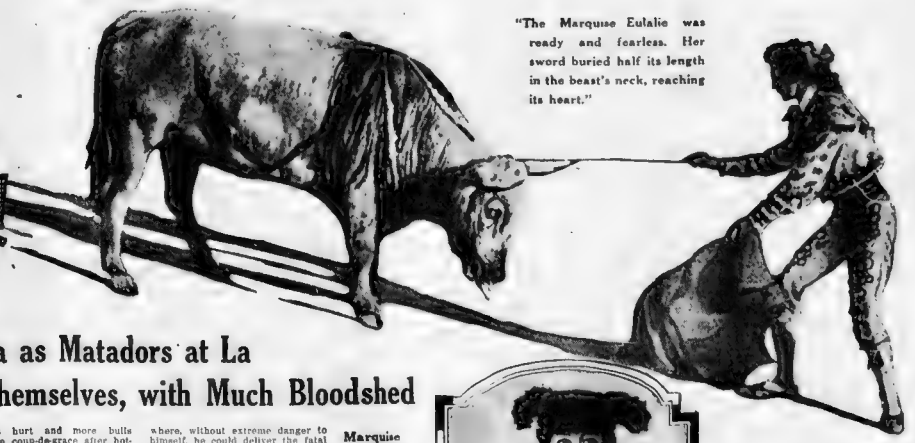
Not Cruel Enough for the Spanish Ladies!



"The Marquise Eulalie was ready and fearless. Her sword buried half its length in the beast's neck, reaching its heart."

So Marquise Eulalie and Donna Maria Enter the Arena as Matadors at La Granja and Slay Fierce Bulls Themselves, with Much Bloodshed

Madrid, Aug 16

ARISTOCRATIC society in the Spanish capital—the most conservative and tradition-bound in the world—hardly knows whether to be shocked or delighted over the unheard-of innovation at La Granja, when two high-born Spanish ladies not only acted as judges at a bull fight, but actually went into the arena and fought bulls themselves!

The Marquisee Eulalie of Muruaga, who had a horse killed under her and yet who killed her bull with all the grace of an experienced professional matador, is the heroine of the hour in the "sporty set"—though it is probable that she will have a bad half hour with her father confessor.

It is considered a "sign of the times" that these aristocratic ladies should have turned bull fighters, though it was a most exclusive occasion, gotten up for charity. The two heroines are already being called "new women" and "suffragettes." Actually, from the American standpoint, they represent something considerably more serious, the tendency of Spanish senoras and senoritas to become bored when spectators at the national amusement unless there is plenty of bloodshed.

Truth to tell, bull fights of late have not been cruel enough to suit the tastes of the Spanish ladies. They want to see more horses gored to death, more picadors and matadors hurt and more bulls given the coup-de-grace after hotter contests with their equine and masculine tormentors.

La Granja is a royal Summer resort, and this "corrida," given in the cause of sweet charity, drew the nobility and lesser aristocracy for miles around. It was a brilliant audience that surrounded the arena, in which noble amateur picadors and matadors were to show their prowess. Among these volunteers were the young Marquis of Foronda, Don Ramon y Gavangos and Don Felipe de Ojeda.

In the group of brilliantly costumed ladies who acted as judges, were Donna Anna y Cortal, Donna Maria y Tassara, the Marquisee Eulalie of Muruaga and Senorita Josefa Pina.

Marquise Eulalie, of Muruaga, in Her Matador Costume.

The Marquis of Foronda Leaping Over his Enraged Bull Antagonist.

From the start it was apparent that these ladies were not overenthusiastic. Entering the arena, the young Marquis of Foronda—one of the most highly esteemed amateur matadors in Spain—made a fine appearance on a white horse, gayly caparisoned, while the bull allotted to him was a huge black beast from Andalusia.

It took the noble Marquis more than half an hour, with the aid of his picadors, to bring his black victim to the point of exhaustion, where, without extreme danger to himself, he could deliver the fatal sword stroke.

The lady judges were plainly bored—the Marquis's horse was as good as ever!

Don Ramon and Don Felipe gave performances that were even less inspiring. Insurrection among the ladies!

"Is this the ancient sport of Spain," cried the indignant Marquise Eulalie, "or an American parlor game?"

Then she announced that, with the consent of her fellow judges, she herself would enter the arena!

Every lady in the judges' box applauded her resolution, and Donna Maria declared that she would follow the Marquisee's example.

Both ladies retired quietly, and presently Donna Maria, faultlessly gotten up as a matador, entered the arena.

Nor did Donna Maria disappoint anybody. A rather small but lively and vicious bull assisted in fifteen minutes of one of the most exciting bouts ever seen in a bull ring. Twice he gored Donna Maria's mount, bringing satisfying quantities of blood, but not disabling it. The animal was still strong when Donna Maria, dismounting and holding out her flaming red cloak in the approved fashion, met him fairly, planted the point of her sword back of his lowered head and reaching his heart.

But the spirited Marquise was not to be outdone. She had insisted on an extra horse being made ready for her, and entered the arena with eyes flashing and lips drawn out to a thin line. Her appearance was at once noble and femininely fascinating. Not a man in the audience that did not split his throat with bravos.

The bull allotted to the Marquise was a great black and white brute with a "growth" that could be felt. The Marquise mounted him scornfully. He charged, and in the pursuit around the arena that followed his sharp horns gashed the flank of the Marquise's horse half a dozen times. Finally, when she whirled on the enraged animal the horse was not quick enough. In another moment he lay dying in a glorious welter of blood. But the Marquise, dismounting in time, was ready and fearless with cloak and sword.

Twice as the bull charged she leaped nimbly aside. The third time saw her sword buried half its length in the beast's neck at the approved point just forward of the left shoulder blade. The bull on its knees, with two great red streams pouring from its nostrils, showed that the Marquise was undoubted victor.

Spanish gallantry, of course, covered the chagrin of the noble male competitors. The whole audience had constituted itself judge, and there was none to dispute the laurels awarded to the Marquise Eulalie of Muruaga.

Henceforth as the word has gone forth professional matadors will have to be braver and more cruel if they hope to retain the interest of Spanish ladies of rank.

Has Man More Self Respect Than Woman?

An Original Estimate of American Women By Mme, Olga Petrowa, the Famous Polish Beauty.

MAN never absolutely loses his self respect.

A woman does! That is why a bad woman is so much worse than a bad man. When she says: "I don't care," then she means that life is all over for her and she does not care what happens to her.

In a woman brains and heart seldom go together, any more than heavy drama and food do!

A woman who does not improve upon what Nature made her is colossally vain. She should improve, if ever so little, on Nature's handiwork.

The American woman converses. She has words, mentality, quick wit. But the Continental woman has temperament. Forty per cent of her conversation only is words, the other sixty is gesture, innuendo, facial expression. This the English and American woman should learn.

What makes the American woman so different? Her bringing up. For generations, the American woman, and by this I mean the woman of British and German descent, has been taught self control, repression, and now she believes that to show her feelings is a crime.

The Continental woman does not mind surface. She is responsive to every breath of air. She is like an elastic band, responding to man's every mood.

Words failing her, she raises an eyebrow, slightly lifts a charming shoulder, and the man needs no words to read. What she would say is all there.

The American woman, however, in fact all women, are born actresses. They have to be. They must attract. They are born in it! And the one feature the American woman is learning to use is her eyes!

But she must use more than eyes. She must lose her self consciousness and not be afraid to show her feelings.

The Continental woman does not mind making a fool of herself if only she holds the man's attention!

Self control has ruined more women's dispositions than—er—er—uncontrol! It is ingrained in the British mind, and so in the American mind that self control is more greatly to be desired than beauty and charm. This is a grave error.

If the American woman makes herself like the wireless in tune with the man or men she wants to interest, then she succeeds. That is what the Continental does!

We do not have so many divorces on the Continent and why? Oh, that is also a big question. Again it is heredity, environment, bringing up. The American girl does not know she is born until she is married. The Continental woman, from her *child*hood knows more of life. She is taught to accept certain things. And so, after marriage, she overlooks, forgives, does not notice things which lead the American woman straight to the divorce court.

The American woman is clever! She is cleverer, she has more brains, than the Continental woman. She is now trained to use them. I find the American woman so often works like a man, but she does not think like one! And she is moral, but she is not virtuous.

Woman is more moral than man because she has been taught for generations that she must be moral, that morality was good form. But she is not more virtuous than man! This is particularly true of American women.

And she is more moral than the Continental woman because she has not the temperament of the hot blooded races.

A woman, however, must be a good housekeeper, even if she has temperament! No amount of temperament should make a woman ignorant of what is in her husband's pocketbook.

Temperament, you know, is not the same as affection. They are two entirely different things. A woman can have lots of affection, but no temperament, and lots of temperament without affection.

Any man who gets both affection and temperament ought to get down on his knees and thank his Creator.

My Secrets of Beauty.

No. 129—Indigestion, a Chief Foe to Beauty, By Mme. Lina Cavalieri, the Most Famous Living Beauty.

"An aid to digestion is the kicking movement."

By Mme. Lina Cavalieri.

LETTERS come to me every day from young women who complain of blotches in their skin and ask for a formula "to cure it." My dear girls, your ailment is more than skin deep. It requires something farther reaching than any cosmetic, no matter how excellent the cosmetic.

The blotched skin shows that your digestion is not good. Indigestion is one of the chief enemies of beauty. Instead of a cosmetic cure you need two more heroic and less easily applied remedies—special exercises and exceeding care in your diet.

The great Dr. Ling, practically the inventor of the Swedish system of physical exercises, advised the abdominal movement for indigestion. He said that after careless chewing indigestion was caused by weakness of the abdominal walls. This exercise gives the abdominal walls the activity they need to strengthen and rebuild them.

Lie flat upon your back on a hard mattress or, better still, on the floor, placing a bed spread or a rug or piece of matting under you if you prefer. Let the head rest on a level with the rest of the body. Keep the neck firm. Raise the right leg slowly until it is at an angle of forty-five degrees, that is, half as far as though the leg were held as though growing straight upward out of the body. Raise the leg until the foot is just half way between the floor and the position I have described. Then slowly let it fall again. Do this four times at most at the beginning. Then raise the other leg the same distance the same number of times. Be sure to let the foot fall gently to the floor. Increase the number of these leg raisings and fallings to eight after some days of practice. After two or three weeks begin raising both legs at the same time to the same distance. This is difficult and, like the other, should not be violently done.

When it has become easy to do this, practise raising the legs at an angle of ninety degrees. By this I mean that the body and the legs form a right angle, a square corner. This exercise must be very gently done to avoid straining the unused muscles of the back and abdomen.

But it is a most valuable exercise and should become the habit of those persons who are troubled by indigestion.

A less strenuous exercise and a most useful one is to turn on the back and slowly draw up the knees to meet the chin. Begin with the right, continue with the left and gradually draw up both knees at the same time. Clasp your arms about your knees, holding this posture while counting from five to twenty, according to the length of time you have been practising it.

An admirable exercise to promote digestion is that of sitting on a chair and slowly twisting the back muscles from side to side. This twisting exercise churns the food in its various stages of digestion in the stomach and intestines. The movement is more thorough and effective if the hands are clasped behind the neck and the elbows held on a straight line with the shoulders. This guides the head in the exercise, and also assists in keeping the bodily poise.

Another aid to digestion is the kicking movement. Standing erect, with your hands clasped behind your head, kick with the right foot straight in front of you, raising the legs on a level with the waistline. Repeat with the left. Vary this exercise by kicking to the side and backward.

All these are most valuable exercises, but must be taken with caution, for violent exercises might seriously strain or displace one of the internal organs. Gently practised, they are all of the greatest aid to indigestion.

I prefer taking them in the morning when the body is rested and new energy gained by sleep. But in the case of persons of abundant energy the exercises may safely be taken at night before retiring.

No one thing will be of greater help in severe cases of indigestion than the copious water-drinking that I have been earnestly preaching to you for three years. Drink at least one glass of cool water on rising. Two are better. Three are best. And, as I have said innumerable times, do not gulp water, but sip it so that the stomach, which is sensitive in the morning, may slowly become accustomed to it and tha the water may be warmed while going down. A glass or two of water should be drunk before retiring. Enough should be drunk between meals during the day to make the total ten or twelve glasses. A good preparation for a meal is to drink one or two glasses of cool water one hour before eating. Drink no water for at least hair an hour after a meal.

When you are suffering from indigestion eat for a few weeks less solid and more liquid foods, as soups and gruels, letting them, however, be thick so that they will contain nourishment.

Eat green vegetables and salads as spinach, asparagus, dandelions and lettuce, freely at this time. Let me advise you that great value to the person of imperfect digestion lies in fruits. Most fruits contain oils, water, mineral matter, acids, carbohydrates, cellulose, protein and fat. All but the last two have a medicinal value. Your favorite fruit will usually be healthful because anticipation will cause the saliva in the mouth and the gastric juices in the stomach to flow to meet it. Whatever stimulates these juices, as a rule, helps digestion.

Remember this as something of great importance in digestion. The sugar in the natural fruit is the only thing we eat which passes directly, without preparation, into the blood as soon as swallowed. This is the reason that orange juice and other fruit juices are often recommended by physicians for convalescent invalids.

I have said that fruits contain mineral matter. Some of the most are phosphorus, iron and potash, and when joined with the citric acid found in the lemon, for instance, they are easily digested and are good agents in the system. These when taken into the system have an alkaline action and are helpful especially to those who have rheumatism or gout, for they correct the excess of uric acid in the system which causes those diseases.

The cellulose is a stirring agent in the body. Therefore I advise not being satisfied with mere fruit juices, but with eating the pulp, chewing it well first. Be sure that the fruit is ripe, otherwise all the bad effects of too powerful cathartics might follow. Drinks made from equal quantities of lemon and water of lime juice and water, of orange juice and water are tonic to the digestive apparatus, especially if drunk in the morning, but I advise their being used without sugar.

A famous physician requires the patients in his sanitarium to swallow the white of an egg beaten up with the juice of one lemon every morning before breakfast. This reaches the seat of biliousness and is a foe to uric acid disorders.

Prunes, apricots, figs, peaches, nectarines and all kinds of plums should be eaten freely by those who are sufferers from indigestion. Apples, quinces and pears have the same beneficent effect, but all especially the apple, should be well chewed. Old-fashioned mothers used to scrape the apples for their children with a knife or spoon. This in extreme cases of indigestion, is a good measure. Usually it is best to eat the fruit as prepared by nature, even omitting the peel, except in the case of pineapples and other thick skinned fruit. The pineapple is one of the finest aids to digestion of the fruit family. Rhubarb is a fine natural aid. For its medical value it is best to eat raw fruit.

Anxious writes, "I very much need a good hair tonic. My scalp is very dry and my hair very thin and short. Also I am troubled with dandruff. As my hair is blond, do not want to use any tonic that will make it darker. Also, please how can I improve my neck? It is terribly bony."

Tincture of green soap, 1 tablespoonful
1 egg.
1 teacupful water
1 teaspoonful cologne.

Mix well and rub into the scalp before pouring a cupful over the hair. Usually a [illegible] and is to kill the [illegible] ing the hair. The [illegible] which [illegible] ...ce

Alcohol .....1 pt.
Quinine .....½ dram.

This is a famous emollient that can be massaged into your neck for its improvement. If persisted in for a long time it should be successful:

Oil sweet almonds..3 oz.
Tincture of balsam of tolu..2 grams.
Benzoin .....2 grams.
Oil of lemon....1 drop.

"This exercise gives the abdominal walls the activity they need to strengthen and rebuild them."

"Your favorite fruit will usually be healthful, because anticipation will cause the saliva and gastric juices to flow."

Okanogan, Wash., Aug. 20.

VARIOUS and weird are the conceptions regarding the swarms of wild horses that make their home among the untraversed hills of the wild Okanogan country in Washington State, soon to be tapped by its first railroad.

To see these supple little creatures scale the sides of almost perpendicular mountains, and to watch them leap from rock to rock like mountain sheep make it hard to believe that they were once brothers of ponderous Percherons, colossal Clydesdales and Morgans. But they are.

Away back in the '40s explorers and prospectors came to this section of the State, bordering on Canadian soil, to locate. They came from east and south. Many of these men, unused to the hardships of the frontier days, perished. Their horses survived and joined the ranks of the bears, panthers and mountain goats, then the large part of the population of this section.

Then, in the '50s and '60s, the gold fever along the Pacific coast raged, and horses and mules were brought West for pack animals. In many instances the men of the '60s, like those of the '40s, perished, and their horses and mules joined the ranks of the horses already roaming the plains along the Okanogan River. From these two bands of horses, the one from the East and the other from the South, the best blood of the kind was blended. But in the rough land of the Okanogan country the once fine-boned animals dwindled in size from steeds to dwarfs, and the kind disposition gave way to viciousness.

The wild horses now little resemble the stock from which they sprang. They have long tangled hair, and have degenerated until they rarely weigh over 700 pounds. They possess vicious tempers, and bite, fight and kick among themselves like drunken Indians. In all this big band of wild horses, striving to sustain life and increase in numbers on the almost barren rocks of the Okanogan country are examples of close confinement and malnutrition. Hemmed in by steep mountains and deep streams, the band of horses must of necessity live and increase in cramped quarters, deriving new blood and ambition only from domesticated animals which wander from farms and enter the secret passes of the eternal hills and are forever afterward held, unwilling prisoners, unless, reverting to the instincts of all animals, they reconcile themselves to the wild free life of the savages.

There are about 5,000 wild horses in this Okanogan band, so wild, in fact, that attempts to break them to halter, lead or drive have utterly failed. These horses will die, commit suicide by strangulation, rather than submit to domestication and humane treatment.

Instances are recorded in the settled communities of Northern Washington where powerful stallions from this band have managed to get out of the hills and enter pastures where tame horses were foraging. The wild stallions then compel mares to follow them, and, once back in the wild country, force them to join their harems, with the result that in late years the size of the wilds horses is increasing and they are losing somewhat the frothing mouths, the bloodshot eyes and the kicking natures they possessed for so many generations.

Farmers declare they are pestered throughout the Winter by these weird pirates, and all attempts to capture one of the wild stallions have failed because of their fleetness. The State has no control over the bands of wild horses and any one has the right to invade the sanctity of the harems at any time and try to capture the small horses.

Few have been taken alive, but Wild West shows and cowboys' exhibitions now depend dentirely on the Okanogan wild steeds to furnish the untamable "broncbos" used in the arena. Buffalo Bill knew of these horses years ago and managed to get a new supply of them every Spring for his show.

One of the worst menaces these little horses hold to the ultimate settlement of the rich prairie outside the precipice-bound hills is that they are possessed of a peculiar disease known as sleeping sickness. These wild horses often walk off precipices, apparently asleep, and fall to their death on the rocks below.

Many pummel their own brains to jelly against mountain sides and trees. The disease attacks the herd every Summer, but rarely kills more than 100. The disease, in two or three cases, has been transferred to farmers' horses, and some animals counted very valuable have succumbed to it by walking into objects and injuring themselves fatally.

There seems to be no disposition on the part of any one to dislodge the wild horses from the hills, and they will likely be "there a hundred years from now unless a great mineral find should cause this mountainous country to be developed.

YOUR LESSON IN HEALTH No. 5—

Exercise No. 4.

Kosloff in Exercise No. 1.

Exercise No. 2.

By ALEXIS KOSLOFF.

ALEXIS KOSLOFF is the first classic dancer of the brilliant organization of this name that is appearing at the Winter Garden in New York.

Like his associates, Alexis Kosloff was graduated from the Imperial Ballet School in Moscow, entering that institution when he was ten and remaining there until he was graduated at seventeen. He then became the premier danseur at the Imperial Theatre in Moscow, during service for which he received from the Government a diploma of that rank.

Here Mr. Kosloff gives some unique instructions upon health. His article is published by permission of Gertrude Hoffman, Morris Gest and F. Ray Comstock.

I DON'T think the Americans, as a whole, look healthy, the men especially. They seem to have little or no magnetism. I think this is because Americans as a rule have not good digestions. No person can be magnetic and healthy who has not a good digestion.

On the contrary, dancers have good stomachs. Their digestion is thoughtless. That is the reason they live so long after they retire from the stage. Many of them live to be ninety five.

The reason for their good digestion is two-fold. First, their exercise directly benefits the muscles of the stomach. The second is that they are jealous of what goes into their stomach.

One secret of good digestion is to not permit the stomach to be chilled. For that reason I am opposed to the fashionable ices and ice creams. Rather, the stomach should be encouraged to warmth. For this reason and because it is a gentle cleanser for the stomach and an aid to digestion I recommend, and follow, the drinking of three glasses of mild tea two hours after dinner.

You will notice that I said "mild." The tea should be only so strong as to be of a light golden color. Drink the tea slowly. Spend at least fifteen minutes in consuming it. You have in your country a man who advocates taking all foods slowly and even chewing what one drinks; that is, keep it in the mouth and go through the process of chewing it, while the liquid is becoming of the same temperature as the mouth. Then slowly swallow it. I agree with him, especially about slowly swallowing the tea, for the stomach should be treated with all the consideration we show to a dear and necessary friend. It should never be shocked or pained. The sudden introduction of hot or cold substances does shock the stomach.

I am opposed to the one or two or seven and a half hours of sleep.

I cannot get on with less, though some do very comfortably with six. That is a matter to be determined by individual temperament, though I am opposed to more than nine hours, sleep for any one. I think it stupefies the brain.

Americans do not exercise enough on this page I have shown some exercises and postures that any man can take profitably to his health and grace. Taken each morning they will improve his figure and take from his face that indifferent look that comes of lowered vitality. In the Imperial Ballet School I practised the exercises and postures shown on this page from two to six hours a day. I still maintain that number of hours' exercise.

Americans do not look as though they got enough water. I advised that when I do myself—drinking one glassful of cold water on rising. But I drink it very slowly, that the stomach may not be shocked nor startled by my suddenness. And if the waiter brings me ice water I carefully remove all the ice and toss it out the window.

I take three baths a day—none of these while the sun is shining, for as we do not water plants while the sun is shining, so I believe the human body, as sensitive in many respects as a plant, should not be bathed while the sun shines. I take my first bath at dawn, a little before the sun rises. The next I take just after sunset. The last I take just before retiring, which is, when I am not dancing, at 10 o'clock. If I am dancing the bath comes later. It is always of the same sort—a tepid plunge in a tub, followed by a shower of cold water.

I sleep, like all the Russian dancers, entirely without clothing.

One word about the mental health. Every one needs some relaxation. The American men I have met look as though they had none. Now the best relaxation is some little accomplishment. Mine is violin playing. When I am blue nothing drives the devils away except my violin.

Here follows the description of the exercises on this page:

Exercise No. 1.—Stand erect, with the feet together, the hands crossed and held close to the stomach. Extend the right foot forward and at the same time bend the left knee until the toe of the right foot touches the floor. Bend the body forward and slowly bring the arms with the hands still crossed upward until the head. Then with a slow backward movement the body is bent up and backward until it assumes the position of a bow. The left knee prevents one from falling backward. Continue exercise at least ten times.

Exercise No. 2.—Stand with the weight of the body on the right foot. Extend the left foot backward as far as possible. The left arm is raised above the head, and at the same time the head is inclined to the right, until one can look over the shoulder. This position, it can be readily seen, exercises the muscles from the chin down to the waist of the body on the left side. The exercise is to be reversed and continued a number of times to be most beneficial.

Exercise No. 4.—This may be termed the "churning" exercise, as it seems to an observer to be churning the stomach and intestines. Start with the left leg kneeling and the right leg in a standing position. The hands are then clasped behind the head. The head thrown backward until the muscles of the abdomen are felt stretching. The upper part of the body from the hips movement, reversing a slow, circular movement, reversing the kneeling leg to standing and standing leg to kneeling position, after every three swings of the body.

How to Kill a Flea—SHOOT IT!

THERE may be those who imagine it is an easy thing to kill a flea. The following will disabuse their minds of any such notion. The facts so far as they go may be relied upon, for they are reported by the United States Public Health and Marine Hospital Service at Washington.

Now, ordinary insecticides, used in three ways: By eliminating the tissue of the insect by some chemical action; by physical agencies, as when the insect is suffocated by [illegible] chloroform or ether; or by [illegible] the insect's nervous system and killing it (that is, [illegible] kept up long enough). It will be observed that all these methods involve [illegible] added.

Fleas, for example, [illegible] ultimate recover from [illegible] thetic which kills their eggs [illegible] such as rats, squirrels and guinea pigs, the latter will succumb where the flea (with that marvelous power of transferring itself across [illegible] distances) will find a new boarding place in another host while not [illegible] yet vivified pelt. Further difficulties in these experiments have been, for example, [illegible] of death. When can a flea be said to be dead? A flea that has not moved in half an hour or more has been pronounced dead, [illegible] such [illegible] in scientific parlance, "recovered its functions, [illegible] sitting."

The technique of some experiments is of absorbing interest, but let us now get down to details. It was found almost impossible to drown fleas by dropping them in water. However, four fleas left over night in a mixture of glycerine and water were dead the following morning. Obviously the flea is a hobo among insects, for one of his dead fleet enemies is green soap. A flea dipped entirely in tincture of green soap succumbed beyond recovery in two minutes; another [illegible] his movements in forty seconds was dead in ten minutes. [illegible] any of the species examined survived the soap.

An even stronger evidence of the disreputable tenacities of fleas is that when immersed in absolute [illegible] they were paralyzed to the [illegible] their movements ceased within one minute, but they all recovered.

We cannot here detail experiments with oil of peppermint, oil of [illegible] kerosene, [illegible] the oil of the [illegible] from Spanish flies, [illegible] many other chemicals. We [illegible] however, that a flea left to swim in formalin (a powerful germicide and insecticide) was "apparently dead after twelve hours," but revived"; another kept for twenty minutes in a mixture of creosote soap and water was still alive after fifteen minutes, but died five minutes after that; it took 100 per cent carbolic acid more than one minute. [illegible] flea of two days that were made to swim in a 1-1000 mercuric chloride solution (a powerful germicide), one was alive after ten hours, the other after eighteen hours; powerful sulphur was practically inert and useless for killing fleas.

Hydrocyanic acid is among the most powerful poisons, yet five fleas exposed for forty-five minutes to hydrocyanic gas were alive at the end of the test.

meals a day fad, because the result is that the stomach is ill equipped so long that when food is introduced into it the gastric juices, rushing to their work, flood the stomach. Every function of the body should be, gentle, and a long wait between meals causes the juices to rush violently into the stomach and overcharge it. Better, I have found as a working plan, is it to eat oftener and less. I eat three meals a day, what I like, when I like, aiming to keep the meals from four to five hours apart.

Americans look tired and I think that is because they live too much in cities. Even when they like city life and it does not seem to injure them I maintain that the constant noises of which they seem so little aware are like tiny triphammers beating incessantly on their brains and bruising their nerves, whether or not they know it.

28 CHILDREN ARE CRUSHED TO DEATH IN THEATRE

Entire Town Is Plunged Into Mourning, Scarcely a Home Having Escaping Bereavement in the Fire Horror

CANONSBURG, Pa., August 26.—A moving picture film exploded at 8:30 o'clock to-night in the Morgan Opera House in Pike street causing a panic in the audience and a mad rush to the doors and the exits.

Before the theatre was emptied of its people twenty-eight lives had been sacrificed and their bruised and crushed bodies were gathered from the main entrance of the playhouse and carried to the morgue, while scores of injured were taken to the Canonsburg hospital or taken to their homes.

The disaster came with a suddenness that stunned the people of Canonsburg, and scores walked the streets in a dazed condition, seemingly helpless in their terror and grief, for few hours had escaped some affliction.

In Centre of Town.

The Morgan Opera House is located in the centre of the town and on the main street. It is a large structure and has two galleries, which, with the main floor, affords seating capacity for 1,000 people.

The house was crowded at the time. Not only were all seats filled, but hundreds were standing in the rear of the ground floor. The moving picture cage was located on the second gallery floor, and it was from this that the explosion took place. It made a loud noise and showed a flash of flame, and this caused a shout of "Fire!" from the crowd.

The spectators on the main floor and the first gallery heard the cry and all arose en masse and started for the exits. The stairways leading from the second gallery brought the spectators there to the first balcony, and then a second stairway led to the main entrance. The rush of both galleries to the stairway caused the exit to become choked instantly.

Rush for Fire Escapes.

Some of the others, maddened with fear, sought the fire escapes and reached the street in safety. But those that had made for the main entrance found not only their own number filling the entrance but they were stopped in their progress by a crowd of frantic men and women trying to force their way into the theatre at the same time.

The latter saw the crowd coming out and were trying to get in for the second performance which was to begin in a few moments. Both performances draw big crowds on Saturday night, which is a sort of holiday night here, and this accounted for the confusion at the main doors.

Screams and cries and shouts from the confused and struggling mass of people were heard for a considerable distance from the opera house. An alarm was turned in and the firemen came, but they were almost helpless in their efforts to get at the tangled mass of humanity.

Gradually it was seen that there was no fire in the building, but the stampede had done its awful work.

The fire patrol was dispatched, but went no further than its own station. Calls for volunteers for rescue work brought a great army of eager and frenzied workers to the scene. They found bodies mostly in the doorways at the foot of the stairways and all were victims of crushing and trampling from those behind them.

Many Children are Victims.

The most pitiful sight was the number of children who were dead. These were found in the most unrecognizable and horrible of mutilated conditions. The total number of dead are from six to seven and one.

The tangled mass later from the building which was still lighted and as soon as the struggling ceased it became easy to reach the auditorium. But in the excitement over the accident it was found that many of the injured ones had been carried to their homes.

Mellen Is "Hard Up;" Boston Will Suffer

No Electrification of Suburban Lines for Awhile; Road Is Laying Off Men.

Because the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad is "hard up" there will be no immediate electrification of President Mellen's suburban lines in and about Boston.

Mr. Mellen announced in New Haven last night that a large number of the employes of the New Haven system would be laid off immediately, that improvements contemplated would not be carried out and that improvements begun would be stopped unless it should prove more expensive to discontinue than to complete the work.

He blames business conditions for this rigid economy, saying:

"Business is of such a character at the present time, and the outlook for the future is such as to require the strictest economy in the handling of the railroad.

"Everyone will be laid off that can be. Nothing new will be started and only such work will be continued as will cost more to leave uncompleted than to finish."

Among the improvements which will be temporarily abandoned are the proposed extension of the electric zone from Stamford to this city, the electrification of Boston suburbs, and the building of a new two-million-dollar station in this city.

Already the removal of engineers of the railroad has begun.

BIG MILL CURTAILMENT.

More Cloth Plants Shut Down Throughout New England.

More New England cotton mills, continuing curtailment plans, closed yesterday, not to reopen until after Labor Day. In Ware the Otis cotton cloth and hosiery mills, employing 2,000 people, shut down. The Tremont and Suffolk cotton mills in Lowell also closed. In Millbury employees at the Cordis mills were told not to return for work until September 8 the date the other mills will reopen.

The Cumberland mills of the Lonsdale Company in Lonsdale, R. I., suspended operations for ten days. From Fall River came the announcement that the majority of the print cloth mills there will go on half time beginning September 4.

FOSS BACK ON TUESDAY.

Governor on His Way Home From Son's Wedding.

Governor Foss will return to Boston Tuesday afternoon from San Francisco where he journeyed to attend the wedding of his son. Word to that effect was received from the Governor yesterday by Dudley M. Holman, his private secretary.

On Tuesday the Governor will have been away from the State just two weeks. At his own request, there will be no reception accorded him upon his arrival at the South Station.

GATES TO WED IN FALL.

Jewels of Bride-to-Be Rival Those of Miss Force.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Aug. 26.—It is understood here to-day that the marriage of Miss Hopwood and Charles G. Gates will take place late this Fall. The wedding will be extremely quiet on account of the bereavement in the Gates family. Miss Hopwood's jewels are the wonder and admiration of all her friends, and it is said they rival even those of Miss Force, the fiance of John Jacob Astor.

NORTH STAR IN COLLISION.

Portland Steamer Strikes Float, But Lands Passengers.

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—The Coast steamship North Star, of the Portland Steamship Company, bound for Portland, was in collision in the East River this evening with a railroad float and was damaged. She was towed into Pier 20 by three tugs. She landed her passengers safely.

MAGAZINE BLOWN UP.

Fifteen Costa Ricans Lose Their Lives in Garrison Explosion.

PORT LIMON, Costa Rica, Aug. 26.—Half of the town of San Jose is in ruins and the fragments of fifteen bodies lie in the morgue following an explosion of the magazine in the San Jose garrison. The explosion was caused by a charcoal fire which a soldier was using. Only one of the soldier's arms has been found.

2 KILLED AT ELGIN AUTOMOBILE RACES

GRANDSTAND COLLAPSES DEATH CAR AN EXHIBIT

ELGIN, Ill., Aug. 26. The injury of nearly thirty [illegible] of the grandstand and the death of David Buck, one of the drivers, and Sam Jacobs, his mechanician, marred the Western auto road race of 205 miles for the Elgin national trophy here to-day.

When the car [illegible] race was temporarily halted, while the injured were removed to hospitals and other places for treatment.

Nearing the close of the race which was won by Len Zengel in a National car Buck's Pope-Hartford car blew a tire and turned a somersault landing on top of Buck and his helper.

When the car was [illegible] Buck was found dead and Buck so badly injured that he died a few hours later in a hospital. Among those injured in the grandstand collapse were:

Mrs. Ray Graham, Chicago, [illegible] William Lochner, [illegible] Mrs. M. Coop, Chicago; H. J. Sauer, Joliet; Mrs. N. H. Van Steden, Chicago; M. L. L. Valentine, Chicago; Mrs. J. Beckeridge, Chicago; Harry Olsen, Chief Justice Municipal Court of Chicago, his wife and son; Fred McMinn, Chicago, and Mrs. Fred McNair, Chicago.

A second panic was narrowly averted as 12:08 p. m. when a big refreshment tent which had been used for the care of the wounded collapsed and fell upon its occupant. Quick work was done in raising it and it is reported that there were no additional injuries.

Zengel is Hard Pressed.

At the end of the fourth lap Mulford was leading by thirty seconds. Hickey, in a National, blew out his cylinders in the third lap and Dapalma's Simplex broke a flywheel, leaving him out of it.

Mulford's Lozier broke down in the ninth lap and he was forced to with draw from the race. He was leading when he stopped.

Zengel forged to the front and while hard pressed by both Grant and Hughes he managed to hold first place to the finish.

Boston Racer Second.

Zengel's time for the distance was four hours, 39 minutes, 35 seconds.

Harry Grant finished second six minutes and 40 seconds after the winner. Hughes, in a Mercer, was third.

The average time for the race was 66.42 miles an hour.

Seventy five thousand persons crowded every available space about the great race course an hour after dawn to-day waiting for the start of the big road race.

Long before 11 o'clock, when the race was scheduled to begin the ten drivers registered were ready and impatient to begin the long 300-mile grind.

Two hundred soldiers reinforced by race officials patrolled the course and kept the crowds back from the lines. Fifteen thousand automobiles were parked about the track. Most of these are from Chicago. Roads leading to and from the course were blocked to everything except automobile traffic all night.

Mulford Rated Favorite.

Ralph Mulford, in the Lozier car in which he won the last year's race, was a slight favorite in the betting.

The race was for big money, the winner getting a trophy valued at $4,500, $1,000 in cash and $1,700 worth of equipment. The second prize is $300 cash and $200 equipment and third $200 cash and $100 equipment.

The collapse of the stands occurred five minutes after the race started, and while men, women and children were cheering the drivers on The weight, as they stamped weakened the supports and they gave way.

Men, women and children were hurled into a pit beneath the stand and panic reigned as frightened women and men fought with each other to escape.

That many were not killed was declared remarkable by race officials, as the track was jammed with a vast throng.

The fact that the stand at its highest point was less than fifteen feet from the ground undoubtedly prevented a terrible catastrophe.

The race was resumed at 11:55 o'clock and at the crack of a pistol, Grant in an Alco sped across the line and was lost in a swirl of dust.

BEATTIE'S DEFENSE GETS A HARD BLOW

BY J. J. O'NEIL.

CHURCHLAND COURT HOUSE, Va., Aug. 26. Henry Clay Beattie's own words, his admissions of love for Beulah Binford and his contradictions of his actions on the night his young wife was slain came back on him to-day and if one mis [illegible] Judge from countenances of the Virginia farmer jury which is trying him lessened still further his already slim chances for his life.

Detective Luther L. Scherer, who was suspected Beattie from the moment the rich youth declared a highwayman killed his wife, and who caused his arrest at a time when other officers feared to do so, spent the afternoon repeating the defendant's lan guage and telling of his suspicious actions after his wife's death.

Previously, in the morning, the practical, matter of fact officer had looked ludicrously upon the [illegible] automobile with which Beattie took his wife riding on the 4th of July 18 and brought her back dead. They were deeply impressed.

Joy-Riders on Stand.

Also in the morning a group of young society boys from Richmond had sworn that they saw a car just like Beattie's containing a man and a woman resembling him and his wife, as far as they could tell in the darkness of the night, standing at the very spot where later it was shown the young bride was slain. The State has more than ever tightened up the coil it has been winding about the neck of defendant.

Luther Scherer, a square jawed good looking man of forty, is not an ordinary detective. He is main agent and secret service chief for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad. He is regarded nevertheless as another Sherlock Holmes and, indeed, has shown himself to be a most capable sort of an investigator.

"Going to the spot on the Midlothian Turnpike where a blood stain marked the scene of the killing," said he, "I found tracks leading from the blood marks of Beattie's car, to a tree stump at the side of the road and back again."

The State contends that Beattie went to this stump and got his gun hidden there previously and then shot his wife.

"Mr. Beattie was with me at the time," continued Scherer. "It was his car I drove there and back and it was only a few hours after the murder. I asked him to arrange his car just as it had been when the highwayman appeared. He placed it on the left side of the blood marks in the road. He said that these blood marks were made by his wife's head hanging over the edge of the machine.

Never a Sign of Grief.

I [illegible] to him [illegible] must be so. Himself was sitting in the right hand of driver's seat, according to his story, with his wife on the left side. Therefore, just away from where the pool of blood was with the car in its present position he didn't know just what to say, but after a time backed up the machine, run it over to the other side of the bloodspot."

Incidentally, Scherer said that Beattie exhibited no grief and no interest in the investigation. He did not offer a single suggestion as to how the highway could be found. First he said the highwayman had gone into the woods, again that he had gone down the road. He didn't know whether the man was white or black—merely that he was a tremendously powerful individual. He had travelled with the man and taken the gun away from him, Scherer declared young Beattie said.

"I asked him then," the detective went on, "how he, a slightly built youth, could have wrestled the gun from this giant. He replied, 'I guess excitement must have given me extra strength.' But when I asked why, with this strength he didn't overpower and capture the highwayman he answered 'My first thought was for my wife.'"

Detective Scherer told how he made a quiet investigation about the gay resorts of Richmond and learned of young Beattie's infatuation for Beulah Binford. Also he discovered that they had been together the night before the murder. On Jager Schmidt Breaks All Records, Finishing Trip in Automobile At Paris.

PARIS, Aug. 26. Andre Jager Schmidt of the Parisian journalist drove up in an automobile in front of the office of the daily Excelsior in the Avenue Champs Elysee at 2 minutes 1925 seconds past 9 this morning officially completing his circuit of the world in 39 days 19 hours 13 minutes and 25 seconds.

Jager Schmidt, started from Paris at 7 [illegible] p. m. July 17, in an attempt to beat the record of M. Stiegler of the Paris Matin, who made the [illegible] around the world in sixty three days.

The route followed by Jager Schmidt took him to Vladivostok by way of Moscow. At Vladivostok the Frenchman boarded a steamer bound for Yokohama, whence he sailed for British Columbia arriving at Vancouver ahead of his schedule. Taking a train at Vancouver the traveler passed through Montreal August 17 bound for New York reaching that city August 18, and on the following day he left the American city sailing on board the steamer Olympic [illegible].

RACE WAR IN GEORGIA.

Two White Men Shot and More Trouble Expected.

JACKSON, Ga., Aug. 26.—Four white men were [illegible] both at Dolles Springs. [illegible] shot and died to death [illegible] was shot through [illegible] in a serious condition. The shooting was the outbreak of trouble between Guy Lane, clerk of the Elder Hotel, and the negro porters. The negroes went on a strike, demanding Lane's discharge, which was done. Two negroes were arrested to-day and sent to Atlanta for safekeeping. It is thought there are other negros implicated. Feeling is running high and there is almost sure to be further trouble.

STORM RUINS TOBACCO.

Hail and Rain Mow Down Wide Acres of Plant.

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 26.—The disastrous hail and rain storm of last week is believed to have damaged the growing tobacco crop of the valley of Stillwater fifteen hundred acres of tobacco were mowed down so thoroughly that not a leaf of merchantable tobacco remains, and more than 1,000 acres were damaged to a lesser degree. More than 10 per cent of the entire New England tobacco crop was destroyed.

MR. LODGE MAKES THREATS, TAFT ON THE DEFENSIVE, OPENING STATE CAMPAIGN

Boss of the Republican Machine in Massachusetts Sees Visions of Closed Shops and Factories Up and Down the State Unless Her People Reject Governor Foss and Restore the Party to Power

President Tells Essex County Republicans That He Recognizes the Demand for a Reduction of Tariffs, but Says it Has Got to be Scientific; Says He is Proud of the Vetoes of Tariff Measures

RE-ELECT Governor Foss this Fall and you close the woollen mills, cotton mills and shoe shops of Massachusetts.

This is the warning of United States Senator Lodge, delivered yesterday to 1,500 Essex County Republicans at Sagamore Farm, the home of Congressman A. P. Gardner at Hamilton.

Senator Lodge's speech followed President Taft's [illegible] of his three tariff bill vetoes. Mr. Taft admitted his pride in the recent vetoes, said the bills were drawn for politics only," confessed his recognition of a general demand throughout the country for a reduction of duties, but declared that, so far as he is concerned, there will be no revision without a full knowledge of the facts. He continues to have great faith in the Tariff Board.

The Taft outing of the Essex County Republican Club was quite the handsomest thing of the kind that has ever been accomplished in Massachusetts politics. The day was all that could have been desired, the dinner was splendid, the music was delightful and the speechmaking touched off a keynote or two for the Fall campaign. Mr. Lodge, with the advice of the President, wants the Massachusetts fight to be made this Fall on the tariff. If the senior Senator has his way about it—as he is likely to have there will be a lot of talk about closing shops and factories or reducing wages to the German and English level.

SPEAKER WALKER INDIGNANT AT SLIGHT

Only once in the course of a great day for the Republicans of Essex was there an unpleasant incident. The Hon. Joseph Walker of Brookline, Speaker of the House of Representatives and one of the three Republican aspirants for the gubernatorial nomination, didn't get a chance to deliver the speech he had been invited to make.

President Larkin of the Essex Club, Acting Governor Loud, Congressman Gardner, President Taft and Senator Lodge had spoken in turn when the great crowd melted away as if by magic. Mr. Walker was to have been next on the program.

Larkin, Congressman Gardner, a confidential man and the moving spirit of the outing, was taken to task by Speaker Walker quite sharply. The Speaker thought enough of the incident last night to send out a statement in which he reviewed the history of his invitation to be one of the speakers. "I would not for one instant claim that the insult was intentional," Mr. Walker said, "but I do feel that the neglect to introduce me was highly discourteous."

MOST OF THE BIG GUNS TURN OUT

They came to the [illegible] all [illegible] the house at Asbury Park and a slew of Secret Service men, who took hands with Captain Gardner and Senator Lodge, and then stood on the front porch to be [illegible] as the [illegible] passed. Everybody was glad to meet [illegible] receptions with which the American people punish their chief executives. Between seven and eight hundred men and boys filed past to shake hands with Mr. Taft and he won by his smile. The smile was never more effective than yesterday.

But it [illegible] had been on for three or four hours [illegible] everybody [illegible] to be the best ever. James of Salem served a bang up spread in a great seven-pole tent big enough for Buffalo Bill and his whole Wild West show. The Salem Cadet Band and the band of the Essex Training School alternated in a concert of [illegible].

Up in front of the house a marquee had been erected for the speechmakers. State officials and dignitaries and visitors. The talking began immediately upon the close of the Presidential reception.

Taft and Lodge Read Speeches.

It was [illegible] Senator Lodge read their speeches. They were laying down the law and the gospel on the tariff and they wanted to be sure of every word. The other speakers were not so careful.

A [illegible] Governor Frost [illegible] said some nice things about the President. Captain Gardner first pleasantly objecting to Mr. Lufkin's introductory reference to him as the "host" of the occasion, explained that he was a "fourth treasurer," welcomed the President to Sagamore Farm as friend and neighbor.

Mr. Taft told them at the very beginning that National issues ought to enter into the State campaign. He intimated that Massachusetts, at least as much as any other State, would have been vitally affected by the tariff bills he had vetoed.

WHAT NEXT, EH? WELL, MAYBE WE'LL SEE THE WAITRESSES IN—AHEM! ER-ER TROUSERS

"HELLO, Jennie—bring me a plate of beans and—what the—uh—uh—well, of all the——!"

Well, wouldn't you gasp and stare if Jennie, your favorite waitress, came demurely to take your order and you noticed that in place of the usual black skirt or big white apron Jennie was wearing trousers.

Right here make a note of the fact that if the suggestion of Dr. Maud Glasgow is ever adopted of putting girl waiters into trousers, the Boston restaurant proprietors will wonder just what to do.

Recently there was a heated discussion in this town about the advisability of hiring [illegible] pretty waitresses. Some proprietors said:

[illegible] the pretty ones. Customers take too long to eat. They fill up with the girls, occupy their time and give up the goods generously. A homely girl will wait on twice as much trade as a pretty one and [illegible]. And the customers don't spend so much money. [illegible] will eat a piece of pie and talk fifty cents worth with a pretty girl, while a homely girl [illegible] will order a fifty-cent lunch and not give the girl a thought.

Delay in Service! Goodness!

If pretty girls cause delay in service what will happen if the girls hustle the orders in trousers?

Quick, Watson, the needle!

Why, the trade wouldn't get waited on at all and it won't know the difference, either. It will be too busy staring.

It's a fetching costume, however, that Dr. Glasgow suggests. There is a neat white shirtwaist, a pair of [illegible] trousers, turned up [illegible] at the bottom of the legs, and a nifty black apron with a wide ruffle all around.

The [illegible] of the trousers from the standpoint of waiting on people is that a girl can get round quickly in them.

It is suggested, too, that they the girls be called "waitrosses."

In some places, where the girls work behind high counters, the trousers would not be so conspicuous. But in an open floor the sight of a score of trousered waitressettes skipping gayly to and fro would be—well, some people wouldn't ever get back from lunch on time.

Too Foolish to Discuss.

Miss Louise Hall of the Massachusetts Equal Suffrage Association, No. 585 Boylston street, said: "I think the idea is too ridiculous to discuss."

Mrs. Mary Kenney O'Sullivan, of the Women's Trade Union League, said:

"While I do not for one moment advocate women wearing trousers, I do think they are far more modest than the disgusting hobble skirt. I cannot express my contempt for people who wear it. They cannot be called women. I think the fashion is appalling and [illegible] thinking women to blush for the boldness of some of her sex."

Dr. Florence W. D[illegible] of No. 181 Beacon street said: "There is no reason whatever why a woman shouldn't wear trousers if she wishes to do so. There is nothing unhygienic about it and there is no reason against it medically. It is simply a matter of custom and propriety that women have always worn skirts."

Dr. Elizabeth M. Abbe of No. 477 Bellevue street, Brookline, said: "The idea that Dr. Glasgow has in mind is evidently to allow women absolute freedom of motion in those occupations in which they have to move rapidly, or perform work that requires physical exertion. That idea is an excellent one as is shown by the fact that something similar has been adopted in a good many of our sanitariums.

Bloomers in Hospitals.

"Here the patients wear some sort of a bloomer costume, which allows all of their muscles to have absolutely free play. Then it would also be of advantage in factories where there was a lot of revolving machinery, where women's flying skirts might be caught in it. A large number of women painters wear man's costume when working in their studios and in the case it is unquestionably done because it is more comfortable and more practicable. The most noted instance of this was Rosa Bonheur, the celebrated painter of horses, who went through most of her life in men's clothes."

Dr. Clara Sh[illegible] of Wellesley said: "From a medical point of view there is no reason why women should not adopt trousers, but from the point of womanliness and modesty there is every objection. I think it would make young girls bold and tend to cause them to become unsexed."

Mrs. Maud Wood Park, the suffrage leader, said: "There is no reason why women shouldn't wear trousers if they want to. I think the time is hardly ripe for so complete an evolution toward the male dress, but certainly suffragists could not express themselves as opposed to it. There is no particular reason why a suffragist's opinion should be of any especial significance on that point. There has been a tendency recently to associate the dress reform movement with the suffrage movement although there is no connection between them. The reform in dress is steadily increasing, although the step to trousers is a rather sudden one."

For Women to Decide.

Dr. Eliza B. Cahill, living at the Hotel Westminster, said: "From the point of view of the physician, and from the outside there is no reason why women should not wear trousers if they wish to. The chief opposition would come from the women themselves. There is no reason why every woman, even if she is earning her own living, cannot also be a lady. No woman would therefor care to depart so far from convention and modesty as to adopt trousers. It is true that we are tending in that direction.

"Women are [illegible] wearing shorter skirts than ever before. When engaged in golf or in farming they frequently wear bloomers under their skirts. The divided riding skirt which enables women to ride astride instead of sidesaddle as formerly, is a step in the same direction. The [illegible] may even come some day when all women adopt trousers. I hope, however, that it never comes, for certainly from the point of view of womanliness and from the esthetic side it is scarcely desirable."

No less an authority than Dr. Sargent of Hemenway Gymnasium, Harvard, is strongly in favor of this type of clothing for women and especially for working women.

Desirable, Says Physician.

"I consider trousers for women to be not only desirable from a hygienic point of view but distinctly desirable in the way of economy and simplicity.

They give freedom of movement. They do away with the injurious corset. They are less immodest. They cannot compare with some of the [illegible] gowns. If they are called immodest. They are in every way more desirable for the girl who works for a living.

Other women are strong defenders of trousers for women, believing that this will [illegible] the superiors of men when they get [illegible] working dress.

[illegible] Baroness Posse was very emphatic in her defence. "Trousers for women?" she repeated. "By all means, let us have them. Of course we are hardly emancipated for that yet, but the time is coming. Let some well known women set the fashion, and we'll have them. I believe in trousers for women thoroughly."

Miss Agnes Ryan, managing editor of the Woman's Journal, said: "I do not think it would be a good plan at all, but I do think that some garb should be worn which would be comfortable, light and sanitary. I do not see that trousers would be any advantage, besides being extremely unwomanly. I do not think women should go to extremes. They should adopt something which would not detract from their womanliness, but something which would be convenient and eliminate the sweeping up of floors and ground, and which would eliminate superfluous material, without being too scant.

"A short well fitting skirt coming about to the ankles with enough [illegible] at the bottom to climb the stairs [illegible] of the present day hobble skirt, would solve the problem. Women are not built on the same lines as men. [illegible] It would not necessarily follow that the trousers would assist them in getting about."

OH FIE!

Dr. Maud Glasgow of New York has started a public agitation in favor of women wearing trousers. She says that as women are doing men's work they should be privileged to wear his common-sense clothes. The accompanying picture shows Dr. Maud's notion of how a waitress should dress.

BRIGHTON FAIR ENDS. LONELY HOSS IS LEFT

EPPING, N. H., Aug. 26.—When they [illegible] up the Brighton [illegible] the most [illegible] styles [illegible] [illegible] last of the Stetson [illegible] [illegible] 157 horses had changed [illegible]. Eben Hazen of [illegible] the gentleman left [illegible] hands. Mr. Hazen [illegible].

"I don't know [illegible] with Jerry. [illegible] kins Hotel [illegible] [illegible] bosses [illegible] week, let me tell you."

Aside From That—

"Jerry's got the [illegible], spavined, and he's [illegible] wind [illegible] [illegible] could be called [illegible] [illegible] man's money."

New Hampshire's B[illegible] [illegible] attention this week because of the activity of State and county authorities. The [illegible] is so old that nobody knows its history. Even Uncle Josh Wiggin, who [illegible] outs [illegible] the grounds to [illegible] and who is all of seventy [illegible] utter ignorance of the [illegible] Brighton market.

"All I know about it," [illegible] Uncle Josh said to-night at his farm [illegible] a half out of Epping, "is that the horse traders come to town [illegible] in the last full week of August. [illegible] last seven days, mind you, [illegible] last full week.

They began coming [illegible] or forty years ago. I don't [illegible] just how it started, but [illegible] traders were men from Somersworth, Great Falls, and up Rochester way in the beginning. However, [illegible] bought real horses, nothing like [illegible] see here nowadays, and the [illegible] came in from miles around. These [illegible] they all wear Stetson hats, try to [illegible] Walter C[illegible], and set out to [illegible] each other's eye teeth.

Boneyard Is Handy.

"Uncle Josh" let the traders have a field this week next to the village cemetery, which was fitting enough. Some of the animals brought to Epping were so close to the boneyard when they arrived that they had to be taken out and shot. Less than a mile away is the Hedding camp ground of the New Hampshire Methodists. Several of the church leaders, driving around the country, had their attention drawn to "Brighton" and saw things that led them to call upon the State authorities.

On Tuesday a tall, handsome young man [illegible], Spinney, the sheriff of Rockingham, and a shorter, sober-faced young person, State Agent Nelson of the Humane Society, put in an appearance on the grounds. They walked in and out among the tents, patronized the hot dog women, bought pop beer from Bill McLane of Exeter, talked with the traders and up to Thursday night had picked out nine horses for chloroform and death.

The "swappers" come to Brighton every August from all over New England, from Lawrence, Haverhill, Georgetown, Portsmouth, Brookline (N. H.), Nashua, and such nearby places as Raymond, Northwood and Dover. Some of the Stetson-hatters have been coming for a generation. One of them is the "Singing Horseman," the veteran Charles Buck of Northwood. Charles brought a couple of skates to the grounds this week, swapped them eight or nine times, bought three or four more, sold them to, cleaned up two hundred and [illegible] dollars and a lot at Hampton Beach, [illegible] to mention some woodland at Deerfield, and set out for Northwood this afternoon with the original two horses and a handsome Goddard buggy. And all the week he was singing the old song that he sang in the 60's, when Brighton may have been new:

> You may push the damper in,
> "You may pull the damper out,
> But the smoke goes up the chimney just the same
> Just the same,
> Just the same,

Knows His Bible, Too.

Visitors from the camp-ground at Hedding found out this week that Mr. Buck knows his Bible as well as he knows horses. Charles is one of Brighton's "characters." He wears the familiar garb of the country horse trader, but his face covered to some extent by a strikingly handsome gray beard, is the face of a college president or successful banker.

All in all, it has been a great week for Epping, although, truth to tell, not so stirring as "Brighton" weeks in years gone by. Time was, in the good old days before New Hampshire kissed goodbye to Prohibition and passed her local option law, when four or five [illegible] horses flourished not far from the "Uncle Josh" Wiggin farm and the site of "Brighton." [illegible] days an occasional [illegible] was followed three or four hours after by a lively fight, one or both of the parties coming to a realization of the fact that they had been trimmed. That sort of thing is passed and gone; now they come up to the village, talk it over with Square Ross, our justly popular legal light, and go to law about it.

Some Hotel, This.

And when they come to the village, they put up at a hotel as unique in its way as New Hampshire's Brighton, the "Perkins," conducted these many years by Moses A. Perkins. Think of a landlord who, in these days of brag and bluster, boldly proclaims to the world that [illegible] hotel is:

> The Only Original
> Table the Same
> No New Management
> No Improvements
> No Tips Allowed
> Prices, First Class.

Tents, corals and gypsy wagons, the New Hampshire "Brighton" is like something out of a novel of old English life. [illegible] like that story of the fair in Jeffery Farnol's "Broad Highway." There is nothing else quite like it in all the United States. To-night they were summing up the week in the bar of the "Perkins," and everybody seemed to be agreed that the great trade of the week was that purchase by a Taylor chap from Brookline, N. H. of the three-legged stallion "Wonder," previously owned by a man in Derry.

NO STRIKE BY CUTTERS.

All Shops Accept New Wage Scale. Ladies' Garment Union.

Only two small shops opposed the Saturday half-holiday order of the Ladies' Garment Cutters' Union which went into effect for the first time in the history of the craft locally yesterday afternoon. These shops later agreed to grant the concession asked for by the union, when waited upon by a committee.

This removes all danger of a general strike over the inauguration of the union's new wage scale and working conditions agreement. Under the agreement, 100 members of the organization are given a weekly minimum of $25 for skilled journeymen, while those formerly working for $20 receive $23, and those who got less than $20 are given $2 a week raise.

Manufacturers' Slightly Imperfect Gray Enamel Ware at ½ Price

We never advertise "seconds" or "slight imperfections" unless we know they are such as will not impair the wearing qualities of the article. A great many "seconds" are as good as first quality goods in so far as the actual service is concerned. Shrewd shoppers know this. It counts for the crowds at a sale of this kind. We can assure our customers that the Enamel Ware offered to-morrow will in every way prove satisfactory and that each piece is worth double our sale price.

DOCTOR DEFENDANT IN ALIENATION SUIT

T. E. Call of Portsmouth, N. H., Brings $10,000 Action Against Veterinary.

Thomas E. Call of Portsmouth, N. H., a wealthy retired lumberman, has brought suit for $10,000 against Dr. Lemuel V. Pope of Reading for alleged alienation of the affections of his wife, Mrs. Mabelle [illegible] Call, of Reading.

The troubles between the Calls came before the [illegible] last November when [illegible] against the other in the New Hampshire courts. Mrs. Call applied for divorce on the grounds of alleged cruel and abusive treatment. She charged among other things that Mr. Call maltreated her, threatened her before people with violence and even went so far as to fix the household liquors so as to make her ill if she drink them.

Mr. Call denied these charges vigorously and returned with a counter suit to recover $10,000 worth of real and personal property. He declared this had been transferred to Mrs. Call's account because he was engaged in business under her name.

Various legal complications followed, with Mr. Call's suit against Dr. Pope as the latest development. Dr. Pope is a veterinary physician formerly of Portsmouth, now living in Reading.

Mrs. Call was a Wolfeboro, N. H., girl. She married a Boston man named Coon and lived in Saugus. She had two children by this marriage, a daughter, [illegible] and a son, [illegible]. In 1900 she divorced Mr. Coon and in 1902 married Mr. Call.

How to Remove A Bad Complexion

(From London Fashions.)

Cosmetics can never really help a poor complexion; often they are positively harmful. The sensible, rational way is to actually remove the thin veil of stifling, half-dead scarf skin from the face and give the fresh, vigorous and beautiful young skin underneath a chance to show itself and to breathe.

This is best done in a very simple way, by merely applying mercolized wax at night, like cold cream, and washing it off in the morning. Good mercolized wax can be obtained from any well stocked druggist. It absorbs the disfiguring cuticle gradually and harmlessly, leaving a brilliant natural complexion. Of course this also takes with it all such facial blemishes as red blotches, tan, moth patches, sallowness, liver spots, pimples, etc. As a freckle remover and general complexion beautifier this old-fashioned remedy is unequaled.

LODGE ATTACKS LA FOLLETTE AND INSURGENTS AT ESSEX OUTING

Declares Democratic Success Will Close the Mills of Massachusetts and That Democratic Tariff Policy Is a Blow to New England Industries; Warns Against the Reelection of Governor Foss

He said these bills were loosely drawn, for politics only,' and made it plain that he would veto them over again with pleasure and alacrity. The President was courteously received but there was no enthusiasm over his speech. Republicans may like it better when they read it than the Essex folks and their guests appeared to like it yesterday.

Lodge's Gloomy Picture.

Senator Lodge was in his best form. He made it pretty plain to everybody that the big man of the recent extraordinary session of Congress—the big man anyhow until the tariff bills got over to the White House—was Senator Robert M. La Follette. When Mr. Lodge waxed sarcastic, in his best vein, at the expense of La Follette, the Progressives and their Democratic allies, the faithful Essex county went wild with joy. In their calmer moments, however, everybody pondered over the Lodge battle cry for the campaign of 1911, his warning that the industries of Massachusetts are going to the bow wows just as surely as Eugene N. Foss is returned to the Governor's office. Hark to Mr. Lodge:

"Now if the country puts the Democrats in full control that is precisely the legislation you will get, and if you want that legislation and want to bring down wages you will vote the Democratic ticket.

"If Massachusetts wants to have her woolen mills and her cotton mills and her boot and shoe factories shut down, or else have the wages of all who work in them lowered, she will elect a Democratic Governor this year and say to the country: 'That legislation proposed by the Democratic House is the legislation which we want.' It is in the hands of the voters. Those of us who disbelieve in this policy will have no power if the government passes into the hands of the Democratic party."

When Mr. Lodge gently chided Massachusetts for going wrong a year ago, and suddenly asked, 'How do you like it as far as you've got?' there was an uproar. 'Vote down the Democratic ticket this year,' he urged, 'and everybody on it!' Then he stopped and the show was over. The rush for automobiles had begun before Speaker Walker seemed to realize that they had left him out. The Speaker spoke rather warmly to President Lufkin, who pleaded that it was hardly in his power to hold a crowd that didn't care to stay, but Mr. Walker insisted that the crowd would have held if the presiding officer had cared to hold it.

Feared Walker's Speech.

Some of the mill machinists were saying on the way back to town that the trouble was that Mr. Walker's speech was peppery, and the organization had received a tip that it might contain a bomb or two, and that it had been decided at all hazards not to let anything jar the serenity of the Taft and Lodge keynote day. As a matter of fact, Mr. Walker's speech, advance copies of which had gone to the newspapers, was as harmless as that of Acting Governor Frothingham.

Scores of Republicans noted the absence from the feast of Representative Norman H. White of Brookline, who, with Mr. Frothingham and Mr. Walker, is supposed to want the Republican nomination for Governor. Mr. Lufkin had a telegram from Mr. White, who was said to be indisposed.

Great Day for Essex.

But hardly anybody would have been missed much in a great gathering which numbered such Republicans of renown as Colonel George H. Doty of Waltham, who used to be chairman of the State Committee; Colonel Sam Winslow of Worcester, former Mayor Edgar R. Champlin of Cambridge, right hand man of Senator Crane; Dr. William Otis Faxon of Stoughton, Russell Wood, E. Mark Sullivan, Postmaster Will Murphy of Newburyport, Postmaster Charley Hoyt of Haverhill, Will Morgan of the Beverly Times, County Commissioners Kimball and Grosvenor, Sheriff Johnson of Salem, James H. Walker of Amesbury and Dr. E. G. Frothingham of Haverhill—who want the same place in the next Governor's Council—Grafton D. Cushing, Representative James F. Cavanaugh of Everett, Joe Peterson, Clarence J. Fogg, Don Macdonald, John H. Cogswell, and so many more that it would take a page to list half of them.

It was a great day for the Essex Club, and according to the opinion expressed last night by more than one Republican it was also a great day for the Democrats of Massachusetts. Mr. Lodge has started things by threatening to close the shops

PRESIDENT DEFENDS TARIFF BILL VETOES

President Taft spoke as follows:

Republicans of the Essex Club:

I am glad to have the privilege of enjoying your hospitality on this beautiful farm of your Congressman, Mr. Gardner, and to join in this Republican love feast, which is honored by the presence of so many distinguished Republicans, including the senior Senator from Massachusetts.

I am here to speak words of encouragement as to the outlook for Republican success. You have a State election immediately before you into which, it seems to me, National issues ought to enter.

We have just finished an extra session of Congress, and there matters were considered of such importance to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts that I do not see how the people of the State can withhold an expression of opinion upon them.

Canadian Reciprocity.

The extra session of Congress was called for the purpose of confirming the Canadian reciprocity treaty, which it did by a support made up of votes from both parties.

I have no doubt Massachusetts, by both parties, would confirm its adoption.

Our Democratic friends, however, were not content to allow the session to pass with the accomplishment of the purpose for which it was called.

They assisted—most of them—in the passage of the Reciprocity bill because they believed in its usefulness, and in so doing they united with the Republican support and did not, as I have had occasion to say to their credit—did not "play politics" in its passage.

I am very sorry to say, however, that having pursued a purely statesmanlike course with reference to reciprocity, they did "play politics" of the most irresponsible character in respect to three tariff bills, which, by uniting with certain Republicans in the Senate, they were able to pass and present to the Executive for his signature.

Tariff for Politics.

The bills bear internal evidence of the fact that they rested on a basis of not "tariff-for-revenue-only," but tariff for politics only.

The first—the wool bill—was introduced into the House by Mr. Underwood, the Democratic leader, with the statement that it was a free-trade bill and was not intended to provide protection to the wool or woolen industry, but that the twenty per cent. tax which was placed on raw wool imported into this country was made necessary as a revenue measure by the prospect of a deficit in the national revenues.

This was a most profound error, made by Mr. Underwood through a mistake in adding up the columns of the estimated revenues and expenditures, so that instead of there being a deficit, as he suggested, there is in reality a surplus of $40,000,000.

Though this error was made known to him, the 20 per cent. tax upon the raw wool was, nevertheless, retained.

Free Trade Wool Bill.

The measure then passed as a free trade measure to the Senate of the United States, where, being defeated, the Democrats and the so-called Republican insurgents united in passing as a substitute the amendment of a bill proposed by Senator La Follette on the floor without reference to, or investigation by, any committee.

The bill as proposed imposed a duty of 40 per cent ad valorem on wool and an average of 60 per cent on woolen manufactures.

This bill Mr. La Follette claimed to be a protection bill.

The Democrats of the Senate secured a reduction of 5 per cent from him and then with his assistance and that of his associates passed a bill providing a duty of 35 per cent on raw wool and an average of 55 per cent on woolen manufactures.

The bill went to conference and emerged after a further compromise, providing a duty of 29 per cent. on raw wool and an average of 49 per cent on woolen manufactures. This compromise was adopted.

Calls Bill Compromise.

Thus, the bill is seen to be a compromise between avowed free traders and avowed protectionists, a bill conceived in an unnatural alliance; a bill the product of political log-rolling for the purpose of securing its passage; a bill framed in ignorance of the exact effect of its operation and a bill that presents only those methods in its adoption which had been generally condemned in the making of previous tariff bills.

Underwood and Mr. Clark in the House, and Mr. La Follette and his associates in the Senate, had earlier been conspicuous in the support of a measure which was avowedly adopted for the purpose of securing scientific information to assist in revisions of the tariff.

Indeed, they earnestly deprecated any future revision without an accurate knowledge of the facts.

But now, in the opportunity presented by the special session and in the desire to "play politics" and gratify what was supposed to be a popular desire for the reduction of duties, they did not hesitate to adopt all the alleged defective methods of previous tariff revision, which they had denounced and to reject as entirely unworthy of consideration the suggestion of delay until investigation by an impartial board should be had.

No tariff bill within any one's recollection ever passed with so little care.

They declined to wait ninety days to hear a report of a full investigation on Schedule K, which the previous Congress by a united vote of the Democrats and Republicans, including the Insurgents, had directed to be made on the first of December.

It is true that this statutory direction was specifically made to a Tariff Board, created under a bill which ultimately failed of passage, although supported by all the gentlemen who were prominent in the passage of this woolen bill.

Still, that same Congress gave me money enough to create a board to do the same work.

It is a board of exactly the same personnel as that which the Tariff Commission would have had, for on it I have put three Republicans and two Democrats and made it nonpartisan in the sense that the Tariff Commission bill required.

It is a board that in every respect is the same as the statutory Tariff Commission, except that it is not permanent and has not the power to summon witnesses, and this it finds unnecessary because it can secure all the information it needs without doing so.

Board of "Hirelings."

It is the same board which Messrs. Clark and Underwood and Senator La Follette and his associates were demanding, but so hateful has the board become, because I have insisted that we should wait until it reports, that Mr. Underwood sees fit to denounce it as composed of clerks and hirelings of mine. The statutory board would have reported to me, had the bill passed, but it could not have made a report any earlier than the present Tariff Board will now make a report.

As to the conclusions of its report the present board is no more subject to my direction than would have been the statutory board.

Indeed, the character of the men on it is the highest possible and they would scorn to yield to executive influence or to render any but the most impartial judgment.

It is really the same board as that provided in the bill and just as independent, but under the present conditions, it irritates these gentlemen of the House and Senate who have been engaged in passing tariff legislation for politics chiefly to have the report of this board of respectable and impartial persons referred to as a reason for waiting ninety days in order to secure care in legislation which is of vital interest to the country and its industries.

I submit that the Congressional history of this legislation, taken with the previous inconsistent position of Mr. Underwood and Mr. Clark, Mr. La Follette and his associates, is enough to show why the wool bill ought not to have been signed, and is enough to convince the people of this Commonwealth that the party in power in the lower House and the combination which was temporarily in power in the upper House ought not to receive from them a vote of confidence.

Bills Loosely Drawn.

The other two revenue measures were really impromptu, and were so loosely drawn that to have put them on the statute book would have been a serious reflection upon the Congress responsible for them.

They would have produced the utmost confusion in the collection of the revenues, would have made very different changes in the rates from those which the authors of the bills intended, and were certainly not measures that any Congress would have been willing to be responsible for, if they had been framed with a bona fide purpose or expectation of making them into law.

They were plainly measures made to appeal to a supposed popular desire and with the hope that by the veto which they had every reason to expect, they might invite popular hostility toward the Executive and the party of which he was the head.

These are the simple facts in respect to the tariff legislation attempted in the House and in the Senate.

With respect to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the amendments of the woolen schedule, of the cotton schedule, and of the duty on shoes, were of the most serious importance.

I can not tell what their effect would be, but as they were measures savoring of free trade and avowedly departing from the principle of protection when they were framed, it is just to say that they were not drawn for the purpose of helping your industries here.

It may be that there were rates in them that would constitute only a proper reduction but nobody knows certainly, not the framers of the bill. Those we shall know in December.

I am here to speak the truth as nearly as I can. I recognize the general demand throughout the country for a reduction of duties so far as that reduction can be made consistent with the maintenance of a measure of protection that shall enable the industries of the country to live.

The time of the Chinese Wall and duties exceeding the difference between the cost of production here and the cost of production abroad has passed, and we of the Republican party are under an obligation as soon as opportunity comes to advocate and carry through a revision of the tariff which shall meet the popular demand and to which we are really pledged.

Therefore, [illegible] Tariff Board [illegible] report in December [illegible] wool and cotton, I expect to submit to Congress [illegible] their report for a revision [illegible] schedules.

Revision of Wool.

I have already expressed the opinion that the woolen schedule is too high [illegible] years that it ought to be revised [illegible] is the subject of complaint not only by consumers but also by those who are engaged in the industries affected.

So far as I can help it, however, no such revision will take place unless it is made with a full knowledge of the facts as found by an impartial investigation.

Is not this the attitude that Massachusetts would take?

Is this not the attitude that her interests as well as her sense of justice require?

Might she approve the [illegible] and retrograde methods adopted in the existing Congress with reference to amendments to our present tariff?

Is not the vetoes which were necessary to prevent such opportunist legislation from becoming law, entitled to the approval of a State, most of whose industries might be affected injuriously by legislation hastily and ill considered.

Do not this session and its results demonstrate that our present system of business which is based on the principle of protection, is in reasonable continuance the [illegible] ing support of the Republican party?

Is it not clear that reckless legislation of the kind proposed in the House of Representatives would imperil our industries so that a [illegible] short of a most serious business depression could be expected as a result?

My calling the extra session has been made the subject of criticism by Republicans on the ground that it was a step which would have political influence adverse to the Republican party.

As I was pledged to use the best efforts I could to secure the early adoption and confirmation of the Canadian reciprocity treaty, I called it for this purpose only, and without regard to any effect, political or otherwise, it might have.

I venture to think, as I now look back on the session, that although that was not its purpose, it has inured greatly to the benefit of the Republican party, because it has made plain to the country, or at least it has given to the Republican party an op

Aviator Thrills 70,000 at Warship Launching

Spectacular Sendoff for Giant Rivadavia

RIVADAVIA, MINISTER, AND SENORA NAON, SPONSOR AT LAUNCHING

THE $12,000,000 battleship Rivadavia plunged her nose into the Pacific waters of Quincy Bay yesterday afternoon in the most spectacular launching of a dreadnaught in the history of shipbuilding.

It would have been a beautiful performance, a pretty sight without any unexpected thrill, but when an hour before the scheduled time with the danger of an outgoing tide and a nobody here, with everything in readiness for Senora de Naon, wife of the United States diplomat from Argentine, [illegible] power for the armored leviathan of the deep, to break the accustomed bottle of champagne across the vessel's prow, thousands of shouts rent the air with "Look! Look! Here comes Arwood!"

High in the sky, sweeping toward the crowded Quincy bridge with all the grace and speed of a home-bird, a daring aviator from Squantum rushed toward the spot where 70,000 persons had congregated to witness the baptism of the gigantic fighting [illegible] of the South American navy.

Senora de Naon, bottle of wine to her hand, [illegible] to crash it against the bow of the battleship, caught up the spirit of [illegible] and, joined in the cheers for the navigator of the air. It proved to be Tom Sopwith, the clever little Englishman, determined to share early in the series of the big meet. There was no end of the most original stunts in the annals of aviation.

Five hundred feet above the ground [illegible] soured, dipping like an eagle about to [illegible] in her fleet-footed prey. The vast throng stood in mingled amusement and astonishment. It seemed like the clash of two great ideas for supremacy—the king, grim, death-dealing fortress of the mighty deep, modern but even now perhaps antiquated by the time words in the say. Some one foretell with certitude what the aeroplane is to do in future warfare. Admiral Togo, when in Boston, made it clear that he dared not prophesy.

Up way up in the air, flew the little craft with the man at the throttle. It looked as though he might drop a pound of [illegible] and hit the [illegible] below without any difficulty whatever. A little dynamite or nitroglycerin placed in the right spot might shatter the big dreadnaught to tons of twisted steel and iron.

Many Are Overcome.

The performance led to all kinds of speculation by the admiring thousands. Everybody seemed to have a "theory" of what could be done to a battleship by an aeroplane in war time and this lent a zest to the launching itself never before experienced by any crowd in any navy shipyard at any time before.

The excitement of the two performances was so great that twenty-two prostrations were recorded by the police. The launching of a battleship is a great sight, but to see without warning a swing of the air-ship over the Fore River Ship Yards at the very moment of the christening was too much for the spectators. Many of the women fainted. They were promptly [illegible] and the launching went on.

The launching was officially scheduled to occur at 12:30 p. m., but it was not until 1:58 p. m. that Admiral Francis T. Bowles of the Fore River Company gave the word that caused the workmen to cut her loose and allowed the big ship to slide down the ways.

Meanwhile Senora de Naon, who was the proxy representative of Senora Rosa Vera Peza of Buenos Aires, wife of the President of the Argentine Republic, [illegible] after the exciting period of [illegible] dynamite had been raised the two quart bottle of champagne and struck it squarely against the vessel, less than eight feet from the edge of the bow. officials said it was the best job they had ever seen at a christening. The wine was [illegible] in a bottle covered with silken mesh and decorated with the Argentine colors, gold and white, having streamers [illegible] feet long by which it was suspended.

Christened Rivadavia.

Simultaneously with the crash of the glass against the vessel's side, Senora de Naon solemnly declared

"Yote Bautizo con el nombre de Rivadavia." In English this means: "I christen thee with the name of Rivadavia."

The bottle being enclosed in the silken mesh, the builders were able to save the fragments. These were hauled up and enclosed in a special box of teakwood and presented to the sponsor as a souvenir of the launching.

The ceremony over, there was a grand rush by hundreds of men for relics of the event. There were long lengths of [illegible] inch manila rope lying on the ways. It had been used to check the speed of the Rivadavia in going down to the water. These long ropes were cut in shreds and carried away. Some of the relic hunters, not to be outdone, scraped up handsful of the grease on the great wooden slide and carried it away with them.

Altogether it was a great day for Quincy. Everybody in town attended the launching. Four of the largest motor boats in the bay, and navy tugs, and launches set up a long, steady scream on their whistles when the vessel started down the incline. The people on shore cheered and waved hats, handkerchiefs and flags and everybody tried to outdo everybody else in enthusiasm. The "two shows" idea was a treat that none of the vast throng had anticipated.

Flies Over Warship.

Sopwith reached an altitude of 750 feet over the launching. He completed a circle of the Fore River Yards and after turning sharply to the left went over the boat and then on to Squantum. He was in the air only six minutes. The main attraction, the launching, was an hour and twenty-two minutes late. Meantime the water had lowered three feet and a half and the officials were afraid the vessel would slide into mud instead of water.

Admiral Bowles was warmly congratulated upon the successful launching of the [illegible] of the Fore River Company. [illegible] enjoyed the hospitality at a buffet luncheon just before the event.

Hon. Henry James represented the State Department at Washington and attended Minister Naon and his suite.

Among the Argentine officers in the party were Lieutenant Francisco Gregorio Lieutenant Guillermo Coppi, Captain Segundo Cardona, Lieutenant Honorio Arreche, Captain Diogenes Aguirre, Inspector Julio Otero, Commander Carlos M. Vallejos, Commander Laguis Arnaut, Dr. Juan G. de Basil, Constructor Manuel J. Bianchi, Lieutenant Federico Gnecco, Lieutenant Commander Octavio Fernandez and Lieutenant Carlos A. Bruno.

Among the Guests.

The Americans present included Colonel F. D. Abbott, U. S. A.; Charles G. Cornell of New York; B. B. Crowninshield, Judge L. E. Chamberlain of Brockton, Guy W. Currier, Levy Mayer of New York, Colonel W. C. Church, Representative James M. Curley, Captain E. Cuevas, Rear Admiral H. H. SCOUTS TO HAVE OUTING.

Interesting Exhibition Will Be Given Sept. 2, at Riverside.

The Boy Scouts of America, in New England, are planning an outing on the afternoon and evening of September 2 at the Riverside Recreation Grounds in Riverside. There will be an exhibition of scout work, wood craft, first aid and scout games. Skill at swimming and life saving in the water will also be shown. Field Secretary Ormond L. Lewis says: "This is not an occasion for show. It is to be an outing for the boys and it is to be hoped that all patrons and other persons interested in Scout work will be present."

THREE HIGHWAYMEN ROB METHUEN MAN

Walter Webb Held Up, Beaten, Bound and Gagged By Gang.

METHUEN, Aug. 26. Walter Webb, a young farmer was attacked, robbed and severely beaten by three highwaymen last night. He was pelted with stones and [illegible] and gagged and thrown over a stone wall where he lay for two hours before he was found by his father, who led a posse in search of him.

Young Webb was returning from Haverhill where he had sold a load of produce for $40. Shortly after 7 p. m., when he was within a short distance of his home, three men leaped upon his team. They pulled him from the seat and proceeded to beat him. When he resisted they struck him brutally. They took the lines, mounted the horse and used it to bind him. After this they lifted him into a stone wall by the road side and threw a rail over him so he would not be noticed. They then got into the wagon and drove off with the $40. Later Ed. Howard, Dracut, found Webb.

MISPLAYS LOSE LAST BROWN GAME FOR RED SOX

St. Louis Scores Three Runs in the Fifth, When the Red Sox Should Have Retired Their Opponents With None at All

Yerkes and Engle Figure in the Defeat; Cicotte Pitches Good Baseball, but Is Unfortunate In the Support He Received

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 26.—A bunch of errors in the third inning cost the Red Sox today's game, the last of the St. Louis series. Engle dropped Cicotte's throw, which would have retired the side without a run, as events proved, if the first sacker had not made the fumble. Yerkes added two costly errors in that session, and when it was all over the Browns had three runs across the plate.

That gave St. Louis a five to three lead while the Red Sox had a margin of one before the inning commenced. The Red Sox had enough chances to score after that, but all they could squeeze out was one lonely run.

Cicotte pitched good ball, but his support was not good, either on the offence or the defence. Boston outhit the Browns, 10 to 6, and each side had five errors, but the Red Sox misplays were the most costly.

Browns Score in First.

The Browns started the run-making in the first inning. Shotton started the [illegible] by getting free transportation to the initial sack. When he attempted to sacrifice, Austin hit up an infield fly which was easy for Gardner. In his haste to double Shotton off second, Larry chucked the ball ten feet over Engle's head and Shotton took third.

Hogan continued the festivities by cracking a single past Engle. Hogan then promptly stole second and went to third when Bill Carrigan heaved the pill out to centre field. Hogan crossed the counting station a minute later on Schweitzer's single.

The Red Sox scored their first [illegible] in the third. With two gone Engle singled and stole second. Krichell evidently wanted to show the crowd that he could throw as well as Carrigan and as a result he threw the ball out to centre field when he attempted to get Engle at second. Shotton aided the Red Sox with another wild throw which scored Engle. Lewis doubled and scored a moment later on Gardner's two-sacker.

Then the Big Blowup.

The blowup came in the fifth. Wallace started the trouble with a single to right. Krichell bunted to Cicotte, but Engle muffed the knuckle ball pitcher's perfect throw. George popped to Wagner and Krichell was doubled at first. Shotton was then safe on Yerke's fumble. Yerkes then made a wild throw which enabled Wallace and Shotton to score. Austin scored a minute later on Hogan's double. By right the hit was only good for a single, but Riggert fielded the ball poorly.

The Red Sox scored in the seventh, but from then until the end were completely at the mercy of George, who did the honors on the slab for the Browns after the Veteran Jack Powell had been sent to the stable.

PITCHER STEWART FANS EIGHTEEN MEN

Performs Unusual Feat for Jamaica Plain Cubs Against Berkeley Team.

The Jamaica Plain Cubs defeated the Berkeley A. C. of Beachmont this afternoon before an excited crowd of fans, 5 to 1. Stewart was in great form, fanning 18 Berkeley batsmen. The game was interesting all the way through. Stewart and O'Brien scored two of the Cubs' tallies on home run drives, besides playing a great game in the field. Gerstel covered a great deal of ground in right, making two sensational catches. The game was of championship calibre, as both are claimants for the State championship.

Pitcher Smith of Cincinnati Out for Season

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Aug. 26.—Frank Smith, the Cincinnati pitcher who was secured from the Boston Americans, met with a serious accident to-day and for a time it was feared he would bleed to death. He will be out of the game for the rest of the season.

Smith was in his room at the hotel today talking over the telephone. He rested one foot on a stool. Suddenly the stool slipped and Smith's foot went through the window pane. A large artery in his leg was cut and only quick medical attention sent at his own telephone request, saved his life.

After his wound had been dressed Smith was taken to the depot and shipped to his Pittsburg home.

WANDERERS BATTLE WITH QUINCY NINE

Teams Fight Hard for Supremacy in Long Game That Darkness Halts.

The Neponset Wanderers, champions of the third division of the Municipal League of Boston, played a fifteen-inning game with the strong Station Outing Club of Quincy.

The features of the game were the pitching of Lilley and Di Bone. Both pitchers were given good support.

Moulton's two-bagger in the ninth inning sent the tying run across the plate and was the cause of the extra innings.

The game was called at the end of the fifteenth inning on account of darkness, the Neponset team having a man on third in each of the last two innings, but the pitching of Di Bone kept them from scoring.

Both teams played gilt-edge ball. The score:

WINCHESTER WINS AGAIN.

Bennett A. A. of Somerville Beaten by 3 to 1 Score.

Winchester won its ninth straight victory yesterday afternoon on Manchester Field when they defeated the Bennet A. A. of Somerville by the score of 3 to 1. Whittaker pitched fast ball for eight innings but in the ninth the Bennets got a man across the rubber after Kenny had a chance to retire the side by making an error on Norton's drive. "Stub" Early made a sensational catch off Melvin in left field, preventing a home run. The score.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 26.—"Frankie" Conley, the [illegible] feather weight, continued on [illegible] for fame and glory here to-day, when he sent "Patsy" Kline on a trip to slumberland after fourteen rounds of terrific battling. Both men put up a great fight from the tap of the gong until [illegible]

10,000 SEE 'CY' YOUNG WIN ONE, 5 TO 4

STRIKES OUT NINE; STRONG IN PINCHES

Squeezes Out the Second of a Double-Header With St. Louis; Rustlers Drop First, 2 to 1, Brown Doing the Twirling

By R. W. LARDNER.

Old Cy is back. He won't say how long he's going to stay, but he's here for awhile and that's some consolation. He made his second start in a Rustler uniform yesterday and went through with what he started. He trimmed the St. Louis Cardinals, 5 to 4, in the second game of the doubleheader and sent the ten thousand [illegible] home happy, despite the fact that the Cards had whipped Boston in the first battle, 2 to 1.

It was a glorious victory for the G. O. M. The visitors opened on him as if they were going to be even more cruel than the Cincinnati Reds. Big Ed Konetchy, who is about half Cy's age, whaled a ball over the left field fence in the first inning with a St. Louis runner on base. The crowd began to groan and to get ready to hand Mr. Young some sympathy when Mr. Tenney decided to take him out. But Mr. Tenney didn't have to make any such decision for Cy began to pitch and when he did begin he kept on. No more large foreign gentlemen were allowed to drive his delivery out of the lot. On the other hand, foreigners and natives alike were forced to take the count on strikes. Yes, sir, Cy fanned nine of them. Rube Ellis, Mike Mowrey and young Magee were his favorite victims, each of them whiffing twice. Steve Evans and Louie Laudermilk also were humiliated once apiece, and, in the ninth inning, a pinch batter named Wi[illegible] swatted nothing but atmosphere, because Cy was even more wily than he.

Fans Nine.

Cy's best pitching was done in the tight places, of which there were several. The Cardinals got him for seven hits, including Koney's homer and a triple and a double. His control was about as good as ever, and only two visitors walked. The crowd went crazy when he pulled out of [illegible] holes by striking out Mowrey, and still crazier when Magee [illegible] to Bridwell for the twenty-seventh St. Louis out and the game belonged to Cy and to Boston.

Opposed to Young at the start was Roy Golden, who is usually unhittable. He was just that yesterday. He was also unspeakable when it came to control. Miller Huggins had a friend in the press [illegible] that Golden would kill him with a pitched ball that he ordered [illegible] the [illegible] watch was Boston's [illegible] was succeeded by Louie, the oft-named member of the Laudermilk family. Louie had a bad time of it at the start, but got along fairly well as soon as he accustomed himself to the strange surroundings.

Golden was Untamed.

Before going any further, we must pause to remark that Al Bridwell played [illegible] If any body pined for Charley Herzog after that exhibition, the pining person wouldn't be satisfied with Rockefeller's job.

It is seldom that two pitchers work as well on the same day in Boston as Buster Brown and Bob Harmon did in the first game. Bob tied a world's record earlier in the week by getting whipped twice on two [illegible] days. So he was due to win. However, Buster certainly deserved victory and might have had it but for an unfortunate wild heave by William Sweeney and some sleepy base running by his mates.

Only five measly swats did the Cards accumulate off Buster. They had all the luck besides. Mr. Harmon usually is about as effective against the Rustlers as the lady owner of the St. Louis team would be. But he had determination born of despair on his side and we'll have to admit that he pitched good ball.

Acting Manager Huggins did the bossing

RUSTLERS SPLIT GAMES WITH BRESNAHAN'S MEN

from the bench. He was suffering from a twisted ankle and couldn't even stand up long enough to put on a uniform. Young Magee, a former Cincinnati semi pro., performed at second base in his place and made a creditable showing.

Manager Tenney and Hank Gowdy broke the monotony by traveling back and forth between the bench and first base. Hank was in the first game when it started, but retired with a sore finger in the second inning. The manager then took the job until the fourth inning of the second conflict, when Hank's finger was so much better that he was called to go in and get a very important hit off the left handed Laudermilk.

Ingerton Spiked.

The Cubs began scoring early in the day. With one out in the first inning of the first game, Oakes walked. Koney hit a sharp bounder to Ingerton, who blocked it and recovered in time to peg out the Konetchy at first. It was a hit and run play and Oakes kept right on to third. Scotty tried to stop his spikes and the ball at the same time. The result was that Oakes was declared safe and Mr. Ingerton retired to the club house long enough to get his hand patched. Ellis's sharp single to centre scored Oakes. The round ended when Donlin made a sweet catch of Evans's long punch against the seats in right centre.

Things were then quiet until the fourth, when Buster had some hard luck. Evans singled to right and was duly sacrificed to second by Hauser. Mowrey died on an easy grounder, Steve going to third. The side should have been retired on Bliss's bounder to Sweeney, but Bill threw poorly and lost the decision at first base while the comedian crossed the plate. That was absolutely all for the Cards and it was enough.

Rustlers Score.

Boston got its only run in the same inning. With one out, Jackson singled to left and Donlin poked a safe one through Hauser. Miller popped to the Hauser person and Ingerton lifted a tall fly to left. Jackson trotted home on it, but Mike thought there was only one out. So he hesitated so long that he was able only to reach second when the ball fell safe between Hauser and Ellis. Tenney tried hard, but Mowrey was in front of his liner.

Harmon issued two passes in the fifth, but got away unharmed. In the next three innings he had things pretty much his own way. There were two gone in the ninth when [illegible] a single to [illegible] to run for him, and Al died stealing. Score:

CY YOUNG IS STEADY WITH MEN ON BASES IN SECOND BATTLE

When Old Cy stepped to the front at the opening of the second game, the crowd gave him a warm reception. So did the Cardinals. Magee was set down on strikes. [Several lines illegible] ... One was out in the third when Donlin dropped Oakes' fly after a hard run. The Rebel reached second on the slip, but Cy caught him napping with a quick throw. The old man fanned Ellis and Evans in succession in the fourth.

Mr. Golden had been going nicely until the Boston half of this round came. All of a sudden he forgot the location of the plate and filled up the bases with passes to Sweeney, Bridwell and Jackson. He was about to force in a run when he was yanked and Louie What's His Name Laudermilk took his place. Donlin scored Sweeney with a long sacrifice fly to Oakes. With Miller at bat Louie uncorked a wild pitch which moved up Bridwell and Jackson. Then Miller fouled out. Scotty Ingerton drove in the two runs with a double to left centre. Gowdy came up in Tenney's place and delivered a single to centre on which Ingerton [illegible]. Scotty and Oakes' throw reached Bliss at the same time. The collision knocked the ball out of Jack's hands and Gowdy took third, where he was left when Rariden fanned.

Mowrey's double, which would have been an easy out on most grounds, started the fifth. Two outs followed it, but Magee sent Mike in with a triple over Jackson's head. The Cards still needed one to tie and they almost got it in the sixth. Koney walked and raced to third when Gowdy heaved Ellis' grounder to left field, Ellis pulling up at second. Evans fouled to Rariden and Koney was nailed at the plate on Hauser's grounder to Sweeney; after which Mowrey gracefully fanned. This was some pinch pitching for Old Cy, believe us.

Cards Tie It Up.

The score did manage to get itself tied up in the St. Louis eighth. Koney singled and stole, after which Ellis had flied to Jackson. Evans intended to drive in the tally, but Bridwell fooled him with the prettiest kind of a stop back of second and an equally pretty throw. Hauser came through with a single on which the Bohemian raced home.

The Rustlers were hungry for supper and broke the tie immediately. Bridwell's fly dropped safe behind Hauser. Jackson flied out and Donlin forced "Brid," but Hauser was in such a hurry to make a double play that he heaved to the home bench, Michael hustling to second. Miller's hit wasn't a solid one by any means. It was a puny fly just out of Magee's reach. Anyhow, it did the business, sending Donlin home with the tally that settled it.

Miller's Hit Wins.

The bugs were a little bit scared even then, but they felt better when Bliss flied to Miller and Wiley struck out. Magee hit the ball on the nose, but the reliable Bridwell bagged his liner and started for the clubhouse. Score:

Pirates Have a Chance To Battle Again for World's Championship

R. W. Lardner Analyzes the Pittsburg Team in a Series of Articles on the Probable Contenders This Year

Fred Clarke's Men Could Give Either the Athletics or the Tigers a Tough Battle for the Championship of the World

Lardner's Stories of World's Championship Contenders This Year

THIS is the first of a series of five articles by R. W. Lardner, the Boston AMERICAN'S baseball expert, analyzing the five major league teams from which it is probable the contenders for the world's baseball championship of 1911 will be chosen. The articles will be of particular interest because of the Boston AMERICAN'S great contest of baseball "fans" in New England, as a result of which the ten most popular will be sent to all of the world's championship games, wherever played, at the the expense of the Boston AMERICAN.

By R. W. LARDNER.

A LITTLE over a month remains of the pennant campaigns in the National and American Leagues, and it's time to begin talking earnestly about the coming world's series, its possibilities and the relative strength of the clubs which have a chance to be hooked up in it.

These clubs are five in number, for it looks as if Philadelphia and St. Louis had shot their bolts in the National, leaving only Chicago, New York and Pittsburg as serious contenders, just as was the case in 1908. Honors in the American lie between Philadelphia and Detroit, with the Athletics possessing a decided advantage. Of course, Boston or New York might go crazy on the subject of winning and pull to the front, but there's nothing in the past performances of either team to warrant the belief that it can win enough games between now and the 7th of October to pass either the Athletics or Tigers.

A fan betting on the Philadelphians to repeat their triumph in the American League can feel much safer than one person wagering on Chicago, Pittsburg or New York in the National. The real race apparently, is going to be in Mr. Lynch's organization, and there is no reason to make any one of the three rivals a favorite over the others.

Three of Them Nearly Even.

Because the Pirates, Cubs and Giants are on terms so nearly even, it is puzzling to know which club to talk about first. One might as well do them in alphabetical order and start with Chicago. But no. Better start to lead off with the Pittsburgers, because they will pastime here this week and Bostonians will have a chance to see them face to face.

The team Fred Clarke is leading this year is almost the same as the one with which he won the world's championship in 1909. The important exception is at first base. Billy Abstein had that job when the Pirates licked the Tigers for the big title, and he didn't take care of it any too well to suit Mr. Clarke. The Kansas farmer made up his mind that Bill wouldn't do for another season and set about to find a substitute.

Jack Flynn, who was with the St. Paul Club that year, was purchased and he and Bud Sharpe fought it out between themselves. Jack was the winner and his slugging helped the Pirates to win many a battle in 1910. But Jack wasn't the finished first baseman that Clarke was looking for. He decided on another change, and this time it was Fred Hunter, a member of the Kansas City team, who got the call.

Fred appeared to have little opposition, but he too failed to reach the standard, and finally he was assigned to bench duty.

Lately McKechnie, a third baseman, second baseman and shortstop, was shifted to first. Clarke evidently likes him better than any of the others, despite the fact that he is comparatively short for a holder of the position in which size counts for so much.

Manager Fred probably would like to shift Wagner to first base, but doesn't want to pull the big Dutchman away from short unless he has a satisfactory man to send there. Honus is a wonderful first baseman. He is also a wonderful shortstop.

If the Pirates should win the flag, McKechnie would probably be on first base in the world's series. This arrangement would leave the rest of the club in act.

Pirates Better Than in 1909

Unless Leach, Wagner and Clarke have fallen off in their work, and there is little to show that such is the case—the pirates are stronger and better balanced than they were in 1909. This is principally because of the present superiority of their substitutes.

Good utility men are invaluable to a pennant winning ball club. And if you'll look over the world's series of the last few years, you will discover that almost every fall, one of the two contenders was forced to play a substitute in one position or another.

A successful fight for the flag is not an easy one as a general rule, and a star or two are likely to be put out of commission by injuries received in the strenuous battles of the finish.

Now that McKechnie has become the regular at first base, Fred Hunter can be classed with the utility men. He would get a chance only in case of injury to McKechnie and would hardly be used in any other position. The other infield substitute is McCarthy, the little Notre Dame University star. He is a capable defensive performer and is shy only on hitting ability. He has done good work at short and third and probably would have no trouble at second.

The outfield understudies are "Scoops" Carey and Vin Campbell. Carey would be given preference in case of accident to Leach, Clarke or Wilson, while Vin's operations would probably be confined to pinch hitting and pinch running. But McCarthy, Carey, Campbell and Hunter are all good men to have sticking around, about as good a force of substitutes as can be found in the big leagues at present.

There isn't a bit of doubt that pitchers and catchers are the most important people in a short series such as that for the world's title. The Pirates aren't overstocked with reliable pitchers, but they have two or three really classy ones, and that's enough for the purpose.

Pitching Staff of the Pirates.

It's too soon to discuss Marty O'Toole as a factor, for he hasn't had a chance to show whether or not he can stand the gaff. Manager Clarke would probably depend on Adams, Camnitz and Ferry or Steele, with Lefty Leifield in readiness to serve where left-handedness was in demand.

"Babe" Adams was the "big noise" in the series with Detroit. His work last year and this hasn't come up to his 1909 showing, but he's a mighty good man for a stunt like the scrap for the big title. For one thing, he's there with the necessary nerve. But "Babe" doesn't depend on nerve alone. He has plenty of stuff and a good pitching head.

Adams's effectiveness against Detroit is known. It is a question whether he would prove as strong against the Athletics. Intelligent right-handers are the best things to use against the Mackmen. In fact, it is seldom that any wise manager tries a left-hander on the Philadelphians. Still, there is a chance that Leifield would be just the sort of southpaw capable of whipping the champions. Doc White of the Chicago Sox is usually pretty good against them, and Doc like Lefty, places a lot of dependence on his brains.

Camnitz, when he is at his best, is one of the most effective of pitchers. His speed is great and his curve ball a thing to be proud of. If he should happen to be just right, it's a good bet that he would fool the Athletics or the Tigers. But the "Kentucky Rosebud" has his off days, and the Athletics and Tigers are not the kind to let a pitcher get away with anything.

Ferry and Steele may be spoken of as youngsters, although the latter had a little experience in the big league with the Boston Red Sox. He has shown a lot this season and would almost surely be a starter if the Pirates won out. Ferry would probably be saved to use as ballast.

The Pirates have plenty of strength behind the bat. George Gibson is as capable as anybody and he would be the every day worker in the big series. Mike Simon is his understudy, and Mike has done pretty good work this year. "Gibby" can catch, throw and hit. He would see that the American Leaguers were kept tame on the bases. He is far better than any of Mack's backstops, despite the showing of Lapp and Thomas last Fall.

Strong on the Defence.

The Pirates don't have to tip their hats to anybody when it comes to defensive work. Byrne, Wagner and Miller are stars in their positions, and the outfield is one of the four strongest in the country when Leach, Clarke and Wilson are on the job.

That the Pirates can hit Detroit's pitchers was proved two years ago. Bender might fool them, and Morgan would have a chance, but Coombs would have to have his best control or run the risk of being murdered.

Clarke, Wilson and McKechnie are the three left handed batsmen among the regular Pirates. The manager himself has been known to hit southpaw pitching and the right handers in the list—Byrne, Leach, Miller and Gibson—are death on the port siders, so it wouldn't look like the best policy to work Plank against them more than once. The Tigers have only one left handed pitcher, Mitchell, and you can bet all your possessions that Jennings wouldn't give him a chance against Pittsburg.

The Pirates can hit and field and run the bases. They have one of the foxiest managers in the business and some of the most intelligent ball players. Their pitching strength isn't as great as Clarke would like to have it, and pitching is what counts in the big show.

If Adams and Camnitz fell down on the job, the Athletics would make Pittsburg look as feeble as Chicago looked last year when Overall, Brown and Reulbach failed to deceive the Mack batters. It wouldn't make so much difference against Detroit, for Jennings' box stuff is inferior to Philadelphia's.

The Pirates, with good or bad pitching, would stand a better chance of beating the Tigers than they would of downing the Athletics. But let Adams and Camnitz do their part, and Pittsburg would come mighty close to bringing the bacon home to the National League, even from Philadelphia.

CONTESTANTS FOR BASEBALL PRIZES

First List of "Fans" in American's Great World Series Competition.

The first list of contestants names in the Boston AMERICAN'S World's Series Trips Contest is printed in a page announcement in to-day's Boston Sunday AMERICAN.

Is YOUR name in this list?

If not, this is the correct time to exercise your right to vote for yourself or your favorite "fan," and get a fine start in this popular competition.

The race will cover such a short period that it really cannot be called a contest as it will be all over in a few weeks, and the last votes will be polled October 1.

The AMERICAN has intentionally arranged this voting battle to cover as brief a time as possible, and still allow a sufficient period to find out just who are the ten most popular fans in New England.

Rules of the Competition.

The rules of the competition are extremely simple. A vote coupon appears in the daily AMERICAN which counts one (1) vote. A vote coupon appears in the Sunday AMERICAN which counts ten (10) votes. The ten fans who receive the greatest number of votes by October 1 will be adjudged the winners.

There is absolutely no other consideration involved. This makes it a clear, open race for popular honors in the baseball world, and the winners will be justly proud of their laurels and of the great trips which will be given to them without a cent of expense to themselves.

It doesn't matter where the games may be played. The winners in this contest will see each one and will travel from city to city in a splendid train, will stop at the best hotels, will have the best seats provided at the enormous baseball gatherings, and, in fact will "live on the fat of the land," at the expense of the Boston AMERICAN during the entire period covering the Championship Series.

Your friends will rally to your aid as soon as they know that you are a candidate for the highest honor in New England's baseball world.

CLAPP MEMORIAL WINS THE RUBBER

EAST WEYMOUTH, Aug. 26.—The Clapp Memorial nine won the deciding game to-day in the three game series with the Emerson Shoe Company of Rockland. It was one of the finest games ever witnessed in East Weymouth. Dam's hitting and fielding and Kolson's pitching were responsible for the home nine winning 1 to 0.

Kolson only allowed one hit, a two bagger by Lund, and Dam's shoestring catch in centre field off Coose brought the crowd to its feet. Lund's work for the visitors was a feature. The Emerson Shoe band accompanied their nine and played entertainingly during the game.

"US BOYS"—Starfish Giants vs. Wasps—To-morrow's Card

By Tom McNamara

Copyright, 1911, by the National News Association

[illegible] the Wasps [illegible] the mat to-morrow [illegible] out of the [illegible] three game series [illegible] Eaglebeak Spruder and [illegible] with the Wild Cats are in the dry dock for the time being, to play for the Starfish Giants. Young Marquard, over whom we have gone into rhapsodies to-day in the above cartoon, will pitch for the Wasps. There will be official mascots, water and bat carriers, ground keepers, announcers, special policemen to keep the fans in order and all those incidentals which go to make up a regular organized baseball league, such as the Young America Malgumated National [illegible]. Outside of that there is nothing new. We have an idea as to which team will win the game, but for fear of being wrong we will not put it in type.

When this league [illegible] first organized, a regular schedule for games was made out on a piece of brown paper after a lot of figuring, pencil chewing, frowning, fighting and arguing, but it was never adhered to, except for about one week. The teams play now the way "Puggy" Mullane wants them to. When he takes a notion that his team, the Wasps, ought to be in the lime light, he hunts up an easy money aggregation such as the Starfish Giants or the Wild Cats and makes a new schedule to suit himself. He is one of those young gents who refuses to be argued with and the business of the league has to go as he says or else there are a few black eyes dealt out. Mr. [illegible], who is at present in the country, is the only one who can do anything with Puggy. When he gets back, perhaps there will be a little more system. He cannot come too soon for us.

A little note in a society way. Emily Morton has broken her engagement to Socks, the official umpire of the league. We doped this out from the fact that she threw a handful of loose change, belonging to him, square in his face. This happened yesterday afternoon. We have seen neither one of them since.

Boston Tennis Stars Battle at Newport for Five Severe Sets Before Wright Conquers Opponent and Gets in Semi-Final

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 26.—Four of the [illegible] tennis experts, Gustave F. Touchard, Maurice E. McLoughlin, Beals C. Wright and Thomas C. Only two competitors for the honors scored the matches in straight sets and they were Californians, McLoughlin and Bundy.

McLoughlin took no chances, and played [illegible] Walter M. [illegible], the [illegible] player by score of 6-1, 6-2, 6-4. For the most [illegible] Bundy also forced his game at close against the old Rhode Island expert, D. E. Jones, whom he disposed of at 8-6, 6-3.

World Champion Tells of His Varied Experiences in Working His Way to Fortune and Fame in the Prize Ring

Made a Tour of Australia in 1907 Because the Best American Heavyweights Refused to Meet a Negro Pugilist

Jack Johnson's Own Story of His Life

By JOHN ARTHUR ("JACK") JOHNSON.

World's Champion Heavyweight.

I HAVE dealt at length with my meeting with Jeffries for the sole reason that, although it took place over a year ago, it would still seem to be a popular topic of conversation in boxing circles. As a matter of fact, however, this particular match was by no means the most severe of my career. To be quite frank, I found Jeff very easy, and I can recall quite a number of contests in which I had to work a lot harder than was the case when I met Jeff.

Of the many stiff contests that have come my way, I should say that the two toughest were with Hank Griffin, an American negro, with whom I fought two draws—one of fifteen and the other of twenty rounds—at Los Angeles, just over nine years ago. Maybe I'm harking back a bit in referring to these two particular matches, but I do so because they were real fierce [illegible] though I have always felt that I [illegible] a tiny bit the best of things.

I have never been knocked out in my life and it may interest my readers if I say that the hardest punch that ever came my way I received from Joe Choynski in a match which the police stopped in the [illegible] round.

Now let me refer to my first Australian tour, which I made in 1907 for the simple reason that I could get no one to meet me in America [illegible] professing to regard the fact that I was born with a dark complexion as a very excellent reason why they should not take me on in the roped square. So perforce, as work was necessary and money by no means plentiful, I boarded the liner Sonoma and went to Australia.

Willing to Fight for Any Sum.

Landed there, my difficulties commenced at once. Squires, the champion of Australia, had, it was said, booked a passage for the States and was due to leave in three weeks. Now, I have already told you that I am anything but a good sailor, but although I really needed a month's work to get me fit after the first [illegible] I willingly consented to waive all questions relating to [illegible] agreed to meet Squires at any date he [illegible] name for a purse of £1,000 [illegible] different from the purse I fought for [illegible] offered by the Sydney National Sporting Club.

[illegible] Squires party certainly did make a deposit with a prominent Australian newspaper, but I presume they did this hoping I should not be ready in time, for when it was found I meant business, an intimation was made that the deposit must be covered by [illegible] p. m. on the following [illegible] as this allowed only a few [illegible] the money from [illegible] Melbourne, and as the banks closed punctually at midday, it will be seen [illegible] that I simply could not possibly comply. So Mr. Squires withdrew his deposit and we didn't meet, for when I [illegible] and Mr. Squires [illegible] sailed for the States.

For a few days I kicked my heels about [illegible] that I was going to be [illegible] Australia in the same way that I had been in America, but at last I was matched with Peter Felix, a huge Australian darky, and the moment articles were signed I started out to get in good trim to meet the big Antipodean, who was reported to have a punch powerful enough to [illegible]

In my travels around the world I have kept by me various papers dealing with the impressions my boxing methods have made on the acknowledged best judges of the fistic art in each country, and the following, I think, written by one of Australia's leading boxing experts, should interest followers of the padded glove business:

"Jack's 'enough' would be more than a feast to most of his calling. He is no [illegible] a glutton for work. Johnson sidesteps, springs in and away, swings around in a ten foot or 12 foot circle, and changes front with the rapidity of a [illegible] dash in pursuit or evasion of [illegible] foe. This is shadow sparring, an exercise Australian boxers [illegible] ... [illegible] brought from America. We knew nothing of it in the days of Larry Foley, Peter Jackson, Young Griffo, George Dawson, Billy Murphy & Co. Yet I have seen none quicker than any of those, despite all new notions.

"When they punched and pounded at the old kapok-stuffed mail-bag, which swung its great bulk [illegible] way, and rebounded from the walls more often than from the ceiling, we had as quick, if not quicker men than [illegible] with us to-day. The period of the punching ball [illegible] the wrist and the knuckles [illegible] accustomed to the greater resistance of the jam-full bag broken or [illegible] of any description were [illegible] far between.

"But I like the shadow-sparring and I also like the footwork which Johnson indulges in, so that his legs and feet may become thoroughly steeled to requirements.

Jackson did none of these things, and yet he was the best boxer the world ever saw up to his day, and the best the world has seen since.

"Johnson, however, does things which students of the Jem Mace school—unquestionably the best the world has seen—would consider rank heresy. The American stands with the weight mostly on the front foot, and has only the toes of the back—the right foot—on the boards. Mace school boxers have the weight of the body on the back foot, leaving the front free to be used for stepping in or coming away. Johnson rarely steps in with a blow. How could it be otherwise standing as he does? And he frequently stretches his legs wide apart, and he gets very low down in consequence. The Mace school teaches that a man should always make the most of his height, and undoubtedly that is right."

These remarks will show the changes that have gradually taken place in training, and also in methods in the ring, since Jem Mace triumphed over all opponents with the raw fists. Mace must have been a real wonder in his prime.

Put Felix Out in First Round.

To come to the first match I had in Australia with Peter Felix, who by the way, stood half a head taller than I, and whose coal-black skin was much darker than mine. I didn't worry myself a lot with him, as he was down and out in the first round, a straight right-hander on the point sending him into a [illegible] sleep.

The next big match I had in Australia was with Bill Lang, then resident champion out there. Lang, a finely developed man, showed extraordinary [illegible] in this match. Time after time I forced him to the ropes, landing right and left at will, but Lang was game to the core, and for six more solid rounds took some terribly stiff punishment, until a sharp jab on the point finished matters. A real game showing Lang put up that day, and he took more punishment in that day [illegible] he can ever have done before or since.

After this it became more difficult than ever for me to find opponents in the homeland of the kangaroo, and after proposing to meet two boxers in one night, but finding no couple anxious to take me, I left Australia. On the whole I suppose I may say that the money-taking results of my tour were not too bad as after paying expenses, the profits amounted to something like £400. Things, however, were a bit different on my second visit, as it was then that I met Thomas Burns.

And now let me say a few words about another fight, which created at the time a lot of interest in America. I refer to my meeting with Bob Fitzsimmons which took place at Philadelphia just over four years ago. This match did not go far, but, all the same, beaten though he was, Fitzsimmons showed not a little of his one-time wonderful skill. Mark you, Fitz was a veteran at that time, and yet he was sending over some punches that day which had they reached their target, might have had not a little to do with altering the destination of the world's championship.

I thought the best policy I could pursue would be to get right on to the business, and try and finish [illegible] soon as possible. And that's what I did, winning in the second round. [illegible] the match one of my seconds [illegible] "You ripped into Fitz mighty [illegible]" "I guess I did," I replied. "It's [illegible] game to take chances with a fighter of the calibre of Bob Fitzsimmons, who I consider is the greatest fighter of his weight that ever lived."

A month after tackling Fitzsimmons I wrote "Paid" to the account of Charlie Cutler in one round, following this victory up by beating Sailor Burke at Bridgeport in a contest limited to six rounds. My last engagement in America was with Jim Flynn, the big San Pueblo fireman, whom I defeated in eleven rounds at San Francisco, finally winning on a knockout.

Then once more did I strike a quiet patch. For the life of me I couldn't find an opponent willing to try conclusions with me, so that I decided to cross over to England to try and get on a [illegible] with Tommy Burns, who was over here at the time, and who had just defeated the champion of England, Gunner Moir.

When I landed I think Burns was a little bit perturbed at my arrival on the scene, for he had proved himself to be the best man over here in the easiest possible manner without an effort. In fact, therefore, the young fellow could not have mistaken me for a bouquet of roses, as I openly stated that I would meet Burns anywhere he liked and for any sum. Conditions of that sort are not easy to wriggle out of, but Tommy proved capable of rising to the occasion.

He stipulated that he should receive £6,000, win, lose or draw.

Big Purse Hindered Second Match.

Well, I don't blame Burns for that, but I do say that by making this stipulation he effectually prevented any chance of my meeting him in England, for there was no building available which would have enabled promoters to offer a big purse, while, obviously on account of its size, the National Sporting Club could not put up so big a purse, for the simple reason that lack of seating accommodation would have prevented them from taking even a reasonable amount to balance up against the purse Burns demanded.

So after a lot of smoke and hot air and other futile discussions, Mr. Burns put himself and his traps on board a steamer, and sailed for Australia, leaving poor Jack Johnson sad and lonely and very disappointed. Why, when I heard that Burns had sailed and I knew that, for the time being, at any rate, my chances of winning the world's championship had disappeared, I felt just as sad as a child who had lost its favorite toy. But happily, my day was to come, for which I shall always be grateful. After all, I suppose I might have had to wait even longer, had not Mr. McIntosh stepped into the breach and agreed to give Burns £6,000—his own terms.

Next week I propose to answer a number of questions put to me by readers, and also to tell you something interesting about the real behind-the-scenes life the boxer has to lead.

BRONSON COMES BACK.

Will Fight in Boston Tuesday for the Fourth Time.

The twelve-round contest at the Armory A. A. next Tuesday evening between Ray Bronson of Indianapolis and Tommy Howell of Philadelphia will mark the return of Bronson to Boston for the fourth time.

On his first appearance he met Dave Deshler in a twelve-round bout, which was declared a draw. The same pair met a few weeks after and boxed another twelve-round bout, and the referee could not pick a winner. Two months later, Bronson returned and met Matty Baldwin, the bout being declared a draw after twelve exciting rounds. Bronson's next opponent was Tommy O'Keefe of Philadelphia, whom he disposed of in three rounds.

Bronson has not appeared here since the match with O'Keefe. He has been winning from the leading boxers in this and foreign countries. He was selected by Hugh McIntosh, the Australian promoter, to make a trip around the world, meeting the best lightweights with marked success. He received a popular decision over Dave Deshler in a ten-round bout Wednesday night.

Tommy Howell of Philadelphia is nearly as popular in Boston as Bronson, through the rugged bouts he has put up here. In his first match he accepted a bout with Dick Nelson, as a substitute, riding all day on a train, and jumping into the ring immediately after his arrival. He was looked upon as not having a chance with the rugged Dane, but he surprised the spectators by decisively whipping Nelson. Howell's next appearance was with the clever Roxbury boxer, Young Donahoe; and Howell was again declared the winner after a hard contest.

Howell is one of the dangerous lightweights in the game. He has an old style and a knockout punch in his right hand which he can bring over like lightning.

The semi-final bout of eight rounds will bring together two middleweights—Everett Eldridge of Winthrop and "Fighting Joe" Nelson of Lawrence. Frankie Sheehan, a New York featherweight, will open the show with Jack Manley of East Boston. The other six-round bout will be between Kid McDonald of Roslindale and Al Bates, the Cambridge featherweight.

PHELPS LANDS GOLF TITLE OF WHITE MTS.

THE WAUMBEK, JEFFERSON, N. H., Aug. 26.—Mason Phelps, of Midlothian, is the new golf champion of the White Mountains. This morning he disposed of C. H. Brown, of St. Andrews, the champion of 1910. In a match that went to the home green in the afternoon he had an easy victory over H. P. Farrington, of Woodland, who was the runner-up last year also.

Phelps played the best golf of the week on the outward journey against Farrington, having six 3s and reaching the turn in 32.

Farrington had three opportunities to hole putts to save or win the hole in the first nine, but missed all of them which left him 6 down at the turn.

Two more opportunities were offered in the next four holes, but Farrington only took advantage of one, so that the match ended 6 to 5 for Phelps.

A tremendous gallery followed the contest and when it was found that Phelps was 3 under fours with the match over, he was asked to continue to try and break the record of the course. With the strain over Phelps failed to hole several short putts which built his score up to 73 for the round. Phelps card:

Records Are in Danger When Speed Kings Meet at Readville Tuesday

Four Days' Grand Circuit Meeting This Week Promises to Be One of the Best Ever Held in the Blue Hills—Breeder's Futurity Will Have Classy Bunch.

By JOHN H. JEWETT.

WITH favorable weather conditions the four-day Grand Circuit meeting at the Readville track this week should be one of the best that has ever been held at the "two-minute track." It certainly promises to give the best racing that has been seen on the big line this season.

The division of the horses between Columbus and Goshen the past week made it the off week of the season so far as sensational performances is concerned. The fact that Goshen is a half-mile track made extremely fast time out of the question, but the track in membership with the Grand Circuit had all the best of it in the matter of attendance and good sport when compared with the outlaw meeting at the Ohio city.

Futurity on Opening Day.

The fine card of racing that has been arranged by A. J. Welch for the meet that opens Tuesday is sure to bring out a big attendance here.

The feature of the opening day will be the battle for the three divisions of the American Horse Breeder Futurity. The best youngsters in training will battle for the $12,000 hung up for them. The three-year-old trotters will divide among them the larger part of the purse, $7,000.

Of the entries in this class, two youngsters stand out prominently. They are Justice Brooke, 2:08¼, and Miss Stokes, 2:08¾. The two youngsters have met before this season at Detroit where the filly beat the colt in one of the hardest fought races that youngsters of their age ever engaged in. Prom[illegible] the daughter of Peter the Great, will be the favorite when the colts go to the post Tuesday, but the colt will have a strong following.

These youngsters who got have the race [illegible] form they will be the ones most [illegible] others that have been showing phenomenal speed in their trials which will add interest to the contest.

A Philadelphia lawyer would have hard work to pick a winner among the three-year-old pacers. No one can tell much about the side wheelers, but if the Cleveland [illegible] Pat Logan is up to what report credits him with being capable of [illegible] that heads him to the wire [illegible] the money. The brown [illegible] that won a heat in 2:09 at Detroit [illegible] was [illegible] the race is [illegible] to look in for a [illegible] of the money at least.

Some Promising Youngsters.

It is likely that one of the youngsters by General Watts (2:06¾) will be the selection among the three-year-olds, but Miss Katherine Wilks, the proprietor of the famous breeding establishment, Cruikston Park Farm, Galt, Ont., has entered a couple of youngsters by the rising young sire [illegible] Todd (2:08¾) that are [illegible] [illegible] Todd youngsters were away short of work and by no means up to a race at that time, though they had been given the benefit of Winter training at Lexington. There should have been time to have remedied this since the Detroit race, however, and the Canadian youngsters may "drop something" on the colts from Virginia when they again meet at Readville this week.

Wednesday will be the big day at Mr. Welch's lawn party, as both the Massachusetts and Blue Hill are to be pulled off. These races have been fixtures ever since the Readville track was opened. They have resulted in some of the greatest races in the history of the sport. There is a splendid entry and the promise of a grand contest in both.

Pick of the Trotters.

The Massachusetts will bring together the pick of the best classes of trotters of the year. It will indeed be hard work to pick a winner when such corking good horses as Argot Hal, R. [illegible] C., Belvasia, Ann Leyburn, Chatty Direct and others turn for the word. The race should come [illegible]

[illegible] the American Trotting Derby. The field this year will not be as large as it has been in previous years. This will enable the handicappers to do better work [illegible]

The 2:06 trot will bring together Dudie Archdale, Billy Burke, 2:03¼, the fastest trotting stallion of the year, Charley Mitchell, Belvasia and others that have been good consistent winners this season.

If "Pop" Geers likes Dudie Archdale on the day of the race she will probably carry the most money. [illegible] would get no more of the track than en[illegible] longed to them.

A MOTOR RACE MEET IN BOSTON IS YET POSSIBLE

By J. C. KERRISON.

Negotiations looking towards the holding of a motor race meet, under the auspices of the Bay State Automobile Association some time in the very near future, have [illegible] The Bay State Association [illegible] to Boston [illegible] the very best of talent that the country affords.

PREPARING TO GO INTO ARCTIC REGIONS

To Explore Territory Heretofore Unknown to Automobiles and to Girdle the Globe.

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 26.—Having successfully [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] New Mexico, Arizona and California, in addition to having covered [illegible] miles in the past twelve months [illegible] kinds of weather and over all sorts of road conditions in forty-four States, Dr. [illegible] Percival, who is touring the world in his [illegible] Abbott-Detroit [illegible] in this city, is outfitting for a dash to the Arctic regions. Dr. Percival's proposition is nothing less than an attempt to take the globe girdling Abbott into Alaska as far North as parallel 64 and the Abbott is being equipped now for traveling in ice regions. The front wheels are removed and in their place are attached broad, light hickory runners, shod with flat steel highly polished. To the rear wheels are attached leather casings from which protect triple rows of studs two and a half inches long. The tires are deflected and the metal studded casings tightly attached by means of straps to the spokes and then the tires are pumped up [illegible] metal studs [illegible] and giving perfect traction on the snow and ice and [illegible] capable of getting through almost any kind of Alaska country [illegible] [illegible] of the frozen North. MAKE MOTORS FOR CITY NEEDS

Special Chassis for Fire Department and Other Municipal Purposes.

Kenneth M. Blake, local manager of the Locomobile, tells of a special chassis for fire department service his concern builds. There is a demand for strong, speedy vehicles in municipal service for ambulances and patrol wagons as well as fire wagons.

One of the most successful adaptations of motor vehicles for municipal uses is the fire apparatus used in many cities. Motor hose wagons and chemicals not only tend to reduce insurance but reach fires with such speed that damage is less, owing to less opportunity for the flames to gain headway. Powerful gasoline cars can go anywhere, frequently where horse drawn apparatus cannot.

Horses soon play out in hot weather when it may be necessary to respond to several fire calls in quick succession; motor apparatus is tireless and easily maintains a speed of forty miles an hour.

When there is an extended district to cover, the motor vehicle has a [illegible] advantage over the horse drawn one. [illegible] one auto chemical will displace several horse drawn wagons of the same kind, and still cover the same districts as efficiently and even quicker. Several instances could be cited where a motor [illegible] covers fourteen square miles of fire area and in many cases these [illegible] the fire sooner than the horse drawn engines located in that particular district.

The percentage of the inability of the motor apparatus to respond to a call is [illegible] than the horse vehicles. Accidents happen to both but about in the same proportion. This is attested to by carefully compiled records.

The original cost of the motor fire apparatus may be larger but this is quickly offset to the city by quicker response and less fire damage; by oftentimes dispensing several horse drawn vehicles and by more efficient service. Maintenance cost for motor chemicals is considerably less for service rendered, and the day when the auto fire apparatus might be considered an experiment has long since passed.

There is scarcely a person who has not known of one or more instances where a house or property could have been saved, or the loss greatly reduced had the apparatus been on hand earlier. Those whose connections with fire departments [illegible] make them familiar with the conditions are aware that about 90 per cent of all fires are discovered in [illegible] and that the greater majority could be extinguished with inconsequential loss if the means were at hand.

Cadillac
SELF STARTING

1912

THE most valuable asset the Cadillac Company possesses is its good name—a good name which is not merely the result of popular caprice, but has been earned by what the car has done and what it has been. The Cadillac is, as you know, unique in the kind things that are said, and thought, and felt about it by thousands of people.

This good name, and the extraordinary good will which it has engendered everywhere, we interpret as an obligation to build a car so fine as to remove itself automatically from the likelihood of competition.

For 1912, therefore, our first thought—our one and only thought, in fact—has been to satisfy that widespread and implicit confidence which always expects the exceptional from the Cadillac.

We believe we are justified in saying that in this larger, more powerful, more luxurious car, the Cadillac organization has surpassed itself.

In spite of eleven years of devoted adherence to the manufacturing principle that any one of ten thousand Cadillacs should be interchangeable in its parts with any other Cadillac of the same type, we were not ready so short a time as twelve months ago to build a car as worthy and as wonderful as this.

Manufacturing plants, like men, must fit themselves to do truly great things. Even with a system of standardization which has no equal in the world and which insures an absolutely perfect alignment of parts and the almost final elimination of friction, the value of 1912 was not possible in 1911. The Cadillac is, we verily believe, the most advanced type of exact and scientific motor car manufacture which the industry has produced.

INCLUDING THE NEW AND EXCLUSIVE CADILLAC ELECTRICAL SYSTEM

Starting — Lighting — Ignition

The electrical plant in the new Cadillac not only accomplishes what heretofore has been accomplished in a less efficient manner by separate systems—ignition and lighting—but goes further and includes in its functions a feature to which motorists have long looked forward, an automatic starter which obviates the necessity of cranking by hand.

The plant consists of a compact and powerful dynamo operated by the engine of the car. The dynamo charges the storage battery.

For starting the engine, the dynamo is temporarily and automatically transformed into a motor, the current to [illegible] it as a motor being furnished [illegible] storage battery.

[illegible] start the engine, the operator [illegible] taking his seat in the car, simply [illegible] the spark lever and pushes forward on the clutch pedal.

Practical tests have shown that the [illegible] battery is of sufficient capacity [illegible] operate the starting device and [illegible] over" the engine about twenty [illegible] though it seldom requires more than a second or two. In fact, [illegible] Cadillac engine so frequently starts [illegible] spark that the use of the electric starter is not always required.

The storage battery also supplies the current for lighting. The car is equipped with two especially designed Gray & Davis electric head-lights and adjustable focus, two front side lights, tail light and speedometer light.

The dynamo also supplies current for ignition. Up to 280 to 300 R. P. M. the ignition current comes from the storage battery; above that speed the current is direct from the dynamo through the high tension distributor to the spark plugs. For ignition purposes the dynamo performs not only all the functions of the most highly developed magneto, but possesses even greater efficiency, having more flexibility and a greater range of action.

In addition, the Cadillac is provided with the auxiliary Delco system with dry cell current which has proven so satisfactory in the past. The extra system is separate and distinct, with its own set of spark plugs and in itself is thoroughly efficient for running the car, entirely independent of the main system.

The entire electrical plant has been designed with a view to compactness and efficiency. It is designed with the idea of simplicity and positiveness. It is designed to obviate, to the greatest possible degree, the necessity of attention. Above all, it does what it is designed to do.

THINK OF IT—Two $1000 motor trucks, each carrying a load of 1585 pounds besides the driver and observer, going through 756 miles of sand and mud—at times hub deep—without an instant's delay for repairs or adjustments of any kind. Experts who are familiar with the conditions declare it the most wonderful performance in the history of motor trucks.

BUT THAT WAS NOT ALL—After the nine-day contest, August 8 to 17, the rigid inspection of the expert technical committee could not find one single point about the Buick Truck Number Ten that was in need of attention. A very few other—higher priced—trucks came through with road repairs, but when the grueling trip was over the technical committee found parts that would necessitate overhauling.

ONLY THE BUICK WAS IN PERFECT CONDITION AND IT MADE THE TRIP AT A LOWER COST PER TON MILE THAN ALL THE OTHERS IN ITS CLASS. (See official report.)

200 BUICK TRUCKS IN MASSACHUSETTS ALONE Are daily making records for endurance and reliability, and their owners are not only saving money but increasing business by their use. It is a fact that there are more Buick trucks in use in this state than all other makes of the same capacity, combined, and backed as they are by the resources of a mammoth factory branch—the BUICK is by far the best proposition in the motor truck field offered today. Not an experiment, but a truck that has been proven successful in this territory.

NOMINATION PAPERS REVEAL SURPRISES

R. M. Walsh Out to Succeed F. A. Campbell as Clerk of Court.

Although peace marked the final hour for the filing of nomination papers with the Boston Board of Election Commissioners, yesterday, the last call for candidates disclosed a number of surprises.

Richard M. Walsh, who is a candidate for the job of Francis A. Campbell, clerk of the Superior Civil Court, not only filed for the Democratic nomination but his papers were also presented for certification with Republican signatures and he will contest with Campbell for the Republican nomination.

For the first time in many years peace will reign in Ward 20 at the State primary. The O'Connell faction filed no ticket and the ward committee ticket and State delegation of the "Tip Curts" was the only one presented for certification.

Duffy as Independent.

John F. Duffy, the well-known attorney and promoter of the first municipal dance, cropped up as an independent candidate for attorney general. He will contest with Harvey N. Shepard, the machine candidate and George W. Anderson, who also seeks the Democratic nomination.

Ex-alderman Thomas J. Giblin failed to appear with his papers for the House of Representatives although it has been generally expected that he would become a candidate for the Democratic nomination in Ward 1.

Ex-Representative Timothy F. Callahan will be a candidate for the Senatorial seat of James H. Doyle and it will be a fight to the finish between Congressman Curley and Senator Doyle. Doyle is backing Thomas M. Joyce of Ward 17 and he is also being supported by the Donovan faction of Ward 9. Callahan will be supported by the anti-Donovan machine in Ward 9 and also by the Tammany Club. Those who are opposing Doyle also filed a ward committee ticket in Ward 12.

James E. O'Connell, brother of the Congressman, filed papers for the office of clerk of the Superior Court now held by John P. Manning. The latter has filed for both Republican and Democratic nominations.

The unofficial list of those who will appear upon the ballot at the State primary in Boston is as follows:

HITCHCOCK IN NEW PLAY.

By a sudden shift in arrangements Raymond Hitchcock will appear in the first performance on any stage of the new musical play, "The Red Widow" at the Colonial theatre next Saturday evening. Cohan & Harris announce that the new venture will be the most pretentious production they have ever offered. Mr. Hitchcock's supporting company will include, in addition to Miss Sophye Barnard, the principal soprano, Gertrude Vanderbilt, Jean Newcombe, Augusta Lang, Clara Schroeder, John Hendricks, Joseph Allen, George E. Mack, Harry Clarke, Theodore Martin, and Lincoln Plumer, assisted by an augmented chorus and a well trained ballet. In his new play Mr. Hitchcock is said to have been provided with a strikingly fitting role that gives even greater opportunity for his peculiarly effective methods than any character he has yet portrayed.

National Theatre.

One of the great features of the new National Theatre, which is to open early next month is the large number of exits. On each side of the building there are five double doors opening out, while in the front are eight exits. When full this theatre can be emptied in less than two minutes. The United Booking Offices of America have arranged an all-star bill to open the largest vaudeville theatre in the world.

Match Is Lauded for Its Encouragement of the Fair Sex to Athletics.

Many of the most expert swimmers are already entered for the grand swimming match for girl amateurs of New England which is to be held in Charles river lower basin next Saturday afternoon by the AMERICAN. The first entries include:

Mary McDonough of Peters street, South Boston, winner of the AMERICAN'S race off City Point a few years ago, and claiming the title of amateur girl champion of New England.

Gertrude Gibson, fourteen years old, of No. 18 Van Winkle street, Neponset, winner of the race August 18 from Teneau Beach to Deer Island Light. Her time for the seven and one fourth miles was three hours and ten minutes, a record for that course.

Margaret McDonough of Peters street, South Boston, one of the City Point long-distance swimmers and contestant in previous races held by the AMERICAN.

Another From Neponset.

Mary Burke of South Boston.

Nellie Cummings, fifteen years, of No. 136 Walnut street, Dorchester. She is daughter of Matthew Cummings, ex-national head of the A. O. H., and finishing fifth in the Deer Island contest.

Sophia Spitz of L street, South Boston.

Ethel Dutcher of Silver street, South Boston.

Charlotte McCarthy of No. 658 E. Sixth street, South Boston.

Esther Donohue of No. 9 K street, South Boston.

Margaret Dolan of South Boston.

Emily Collins of Ninth street, South Boston.

A Deer Light Swimmer.

Bertha La Forte of South Boston.

Grace Mehegan of South Boston.

Sophia Spitz of South Boston.

All the girls are distance swimmers. The course for the AMERICAN'S race next Saturday afternoon will be a three-mile one up the Charles River lower basin and back.

This three-mile distance will test both speed and endurance of the contestants. It will be too long for those who are merely dash swimmers, but will not be so long that a girl can win on endurance alone. She will need speed and endurance together to carry home the magnificent silver trophy which the AMERICAN offers as first prize.

There will be other cup trophies for those nearest to the winner, also medals for others making a good showing.

The AMERICAN is receiving much praise for the encouragement it is offering amateur girl swimmers by promoting this race for girls of New England. Those interested in welfare and settlement work are particularly strong in their commendation. Among those who laud the AMERICAN in the matter is Harry E. Lyon, secretary of the Lincoln House in Emerald street.

"This plan of interesting girls in swimming as given by the AMERICAN is an excellent one," said Mr. Lyon. "In the past, too little encouragement has been given the girls to learn how to swim. This match will help to draw the attention of those girls, who do not know how to swim to the importance of it, and will undoubtedly lead to a greater interest in this exercise on their part."

Protection for Swimmers.

The swimming course in the Charles River lower basin will be well guarded by the Metropolitan Park Police, both for swimmers and for the general public. The AMERICAN has an official permit for the race from the Metropolitan Park Commission. This will be the first swimming match held in the beautiful basin since it passed under the control of the Commission.

Henry W. West, superintendent of Revere Beach and of the Charles River Lower Basin reservations and Lieutenant Albert Chapman of the Metropolitan Park Police will represent the Commission on the day of the race. They will have ample force of men and boats.

The AMERICAN will provide necessary means for the protection of the swimmers, under direction of the river authorities. Dressing place, medical attendance, life-savers and other necessaries will be provided, as a matter of course.

The esplanades along the river and the big bridges which span the stream will afford viewpoint for tens of thousands of spectators.

The course and conditions of the race have been announced. The race will start at 3 o'clock.

Swimmers will start from a float on the Boston side, near the Union Boat Club. They will swim up-stream on the Boston side of the water to a buoy off Deerfield street, above the Harvard bridge. Rounding this buoy the swimmers will return and finish at the starting float.

TINKHAM SEEKING TREADWAY'S PLACE

Believes Boston's Claim on Senate Presidency Should Be Recognized.

Senator George Holden Tinkham of the Fifth Suffolk District yesterday issued a statement in which he announces that he is a candidate for the Republican nomination again and also a candidate, if elected, for the presidency of the Senate to succeed President Treadway, who retires this Fall. Tinkham says:

"I am a candidate for renomination and election to the Massachusetts Senate and if renominated and elected, shall be a candidate for President of that body. Although deeply interested in contemporary public questions, vitally affecting the people and the varied interests of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, I should not be a candidate for a third term unless there presented itself an opportunity to serve the Commonwealth in a different capacity than on the floor of the Senate.

"That opportunity presents itself in a vacancy for the presidency without a candidate, who either dominates or even partially controls the situation.

"The public interests of Boston against those of any other community in Massachusetts are paramount, and Boston has a claim upon the presidency, which has not been honored for many years.

"I believe that the Republican party of Massachusetts should be given an opportunity to elect to that office a candidate who not only can, but will be disinterested, impartial, independent, and guided by a desire for a wholesome and reasonably progressive administration of public affairs."

Representative David J. Montague of Ward 10, and former Representative Malcolm E. Nichols of the same ward, also cleared the way for the renomination of Senator Tinkham by issuing a statement yesterday in which they both declare that his record had been creditable and [illegible] contest takes place it might injure the chances of placing him in the president's chair of the Senate. Both are out of the contest and will file no papers.

SERMON ON LABOR FOR SUNDAY, SEPT. 3

Protestant Churches Throughout New England Will Observe Special Services.

All the Protestant churches in New England will observe "Labor Sunday" on September 3. This has been recommended by the Social Service Commission of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, the headquarters of which are in New York.

The local secretaries of the ministers' meetings in this city as well as in other cities have been notified by this commission to [illegible] the [illegible] activity of the churches taking an interest in questions of labor.

A special service has been drawn up including prayers and scriptural passages to be used upon that occasion. Hymns setting forth the equality of mankind and [illegible] will be employed. The text for sermons is also suggested.

This year more clergymen will observe the day than last year. In another year the time of its observance may be changed to early Spring, as many of the clergy are not back from their vacation on the first Sunday in September.

In the Episcopal church, the organization interested in labor matters, known as the C. A. I. L. has sent over 5,000 postal cards, urging the clergy of that church to preach sermons on this Sunday, and report their contents afterwards to the secretary, Margaret Schuyler Lawrence of New York. [illegible] H. Greer of the Episcopal [illegible] of New York is president of the [illegible] assistant [illegible] Charles S. Ba[illegible] vice-president [illegible] meetings [illegible] country calling together [illegible] to the discussion [illegible]

Throughout the State and especially in the textile cities, the clergy will cooperate this year in the evening with a large union service at one of the churches [illegible]

[illegible] for this service are being [illegible] River and New Bedford, [illegible] sections of the State, where large manufacturing interests are found.

The social service commission of the Federal Council of Churches recommends that every pastor write a letter to the secretary of the Central Labor Union of the cities where the services are to be held asking that organized labor cooperate with the ministers of the different churches in making the day profitable, and showing that the churches are willing to unite with the unions and advance the causes which they represent.

Ministers are advised during the next week to visit the shops where the working men are employed and leave with them printed circulars.

The following suggestions are made to the ministers by the commission:

Ask all the workingmen to sing in the choir, and if possible, have the choir made up of union men on that day.

Ask the churches in any small city or town to have a general union service in the evening in one central point.

The ministers are asked to preach on accident insurance, workingmen's compensation, women and child labor.

HOST TO MARCH IN LABOR DAY PARADE

McNamara Protest Meeting on Common to Follow Imposing Turnout.

The Central Labor Union and the building trades [illegible] against the manner of arresting and taking John J. McNamara to California which will be held on the Common immediately after the parade.

The joint Labor Day Committee of the Boston C. L. U. and building trades department has announced the route for the Labor Day parade as follows:

From the corner of Boylston and Dartmouth streets to Boylston, to [illegible], Dover to Washington, to School, by City Hall, to Beacon, by the State House to Charles and then to the parade ground of the Common entering by the [illegible] gate at Charles street.

The parade will form on the streets between Boylston street and Commonwealth avenue, so that the end of the column will rest at Copley square.

This route has been [illegible] because it is shorter than the [illegible] years and will be easier on the older members of the organizations. The start will be at 10 o'clock and it is planned to have the parade end by 12.30 so that the time until 3 o'clock [illegible] devoted to the monster McNamara protest meeting on the Common.

Chief Marshal [illegible] will [illegible] who will be marshal of the C. L. U. division and Marshal James J. Moriarity of the building trades division will make their staffs known at the meetings of the Labor Day committees of their organizations this week.

Selling Protest Buttons.

The McNamara protest meeting committee of the Central Labor Union has sent a letter to all affiliated unions characterizing the arrest and [illegible] of John J. McNamara in connection with the dynamiting of the building of the Los Angeles Times as kidnapping and calling on all the unions to have every [illegible] in the parade and at the protest meeting which will follow it. The Central Labor Union will have 25,000 [illegible] the proceeds [illegible] go toward the M[illegible] the American [illegible]

The cigarmakers expect to have 2,000 men in line. The vote of Cigarmakers' Union No. 97 to parade was unanimously confirmed at a special meeting held for that action. The union will have two feature floats, if the committee on the parade approves the plan. One will be a protest against the methods of taking John J. McNamara, international secretary-treasurer of the Bridge and Structural Iron-workers' Union, to California for trial. The other will display the Cigarmakers' union label.

Coal Teamsters' and Handlers' Union No. 68 Labor Day committee has made plans for 1,000 men to be in the parade. They will march in [illegible] divisions.

A special meeting of the Boston Central Labor Union education committee will be held this afternoon to make important recommendations to the meeting of the Central Labor Union.

Advance Guard Arrives

The advance guard of officers and delegates to the convention of the International Union of Metal Polishers, Buffers, Platers and Brass and Silver Workers is in Boston. The opening session of the convention will be held in Faneuil Hall tomorrow morning. After tomorrow the business sessions will be in Paine Memorial Hall, Appleton street.

President John F. Fenton of the Council of the Team Drivers' Union has been chosen to preside over the banquet which will be tendered to International President Daniel J. Tobin, at the Revere House to-morrow night prior to his departure for England to be one of the delegates of the American Federation of Labor to the British Trades Congress.

The Boston Central Labor Union executive board has sent a letter to the clergymen of all denominations urging them to devote part of their sermon on Labor Sunday, the day before Labor Day, to labor subjects, in accordance with the establishment of that day last year by the American Federation of Labor.

UP GOES COST OF LIVING IN BOSTON

Marked Advance in Price of Beef Noted During Past Week

The prices of the best beef have gone higher within the past week.

While the [illegible] advancing from 25 cents [illegible] within two months, high [illegible] same type is selling in the market [illegible] at 20 cents a pound, which [illegible] heavy beef.

The bottom of the round, formerly 18 cents a pound, has advanced to 22 cents. This is the price for the heavy beef. There are cuts of the bottom of the round that are selling about the market as low as 16 cents a pound.

This beef is not the best, but it is good [illegible]

Rump steak has gone up to 40 cents a pound. This is 2 cents higher than tenderloin brought a month ago, when it was selling for 38 cents.

[illegible] 24 cents a pound, an advance of about 4 cents. But the same kind of beef can be bought for 20 to 22 [illegible] a pound. [illegible] corn-fed [illegible]

[illegible] a month ago this was sel[illegible]

Cheapest on Saturday

Beef in some sections of this city will sell cheaper on Saturday than it does on Monday, no matter whether it is corn-fed or grass-fed.

Walter Glidden, who is well known at Faneuil Hall market, said to a Boston AMERICAN reporter:

"Yes, the price of corn-fed beef has gone up and this quality brings a better price than grass-fed beef. People seem to want corn-fed beef and the demand is greater than the supply. The price of corn may have something to do with it, but there is the fact the people are after it and they want the best cuts and the price naturally goes up.

"Here is a woman who comes to the market and wants a piece of fancy brisket and she tells you she is willing to pay [illegible] But she has to pay more for that fancy brisket, because more people are after it.

"It does not make any difference whether it is corn-fed or not. There is more demand for it and consequently the price has advanced."

Germans Know How.

"Then there is the German. He knows how to buy meat. He will take a cheap piece of meat, and then boil it, and make it palatable. He knows what to buy, and [illegible] how to fight high prices. He [illegible] not after the sirloin or the rump. He [illegible] of the neck, which will [illegible] beef from 7 to 8 cents a pound and he can cook it in such way that he will get as good a dinner out of it as if he had a sirloin tip."

The Boston AMERICAN reporter went through the different districts of this city and at a meat centre at the North End found these prices:

Fore quarter of lamb, 8 to 10 cents.
Leg of lamb, 16 cents.
Leg of veal, 13 cents.
Chicken, 18 cents.
Round steak, 20 to 22 cents.
Leg and loin of lamb together, 10 to 15 cents.

All this meat was light. But it is good meat. The prices of meat in this city differ with the section that it is sold in.

Fruit, which brings a high price in a place where high rents are asked, in the congested districts is very cheap. Cucumbers are selling there 8 for 10 cents, grapes, 6 to 8 cents a pound, pears, 12 cents a dozen, oranges, 12 cents a dozen, potatoes, 5 cents a quart, tomatoes, 5 cents a quart, apples, 5 cents a dozen.

There is plenty of fruit and vegetables in the North End. It is good fruit and cheap. This same fruit will command a higher price in other parts of this city, but among the poor it is sold very reasonably.

Eggs 13 to 34 Cents.

Eggs are quoted in this district from 13 cents to 34 cents a dozen. The flank of meat of beef is sold at 5 cents, whereas it brings 8 cents at the regular markets. Neck pieces of the beef are bringing 10 cents a pound. Shoulder, all the way from 10 cents up to 15 cents.

The prices of fish are as follows: Mackerel, large, two for 35 cents, small, two for 25 cents, bluefish, 12½ cents a pound; swordfish, 18 cents a pound, Cape lantog, 12 cents a pound, salmon, 25 to 30 cents a pound; butterfish, 15 cents a pound, eels, 12½ cents a pound, herring, two dozen for 25 cents, halibut, 18 cents a pound.

Peas are selling for 60 cents a peck, and corn from 15 to 30 cents a dozen.

WHEN MEN WORKED LIKE THE ANTS

This Shows How Men Worked Like Ants Four Hundred Years Ago.

Copyright, 1911, by the Sunday American-Journal-Examiner

THIRTY-FIVE hundred years ago, fifteen hundred years before Christ was born, two Egyptian Kings, Thotmes III. and Rameses II., put their slaves to work cutting great stones out of the quarries, hewing them into the familiar obelisk and setting them up in rows. These two kings between them, to flatter their personal vanity and perpetuate their names, collected in all about a hundred of these great stone "needles."

One of them is now to be seen in Central Park, New York City, nine remain in Egypt, two are in Constantinople, twelve in Rome, two in France, six scattered in various parts of Italy, four are in England—the others have vanished, crumbling back into the sands, broken and forgotten, like the kings that set them up.

◆ ◆ ◆

This picture, impressing upon us the change in human power and also the value of indifference to death at the right moment, illustrates the method by which men raised the great St. Peter's obelisk, which now stands in front of Michael Angelo's beautiful church in Rome.

That great obelisk, one single stone weighing six hundred and forty thousand pounds, was brought from Heliopolis to Rome by Caligula to decorate the Nero Circus.

Pope Sixtus V. had it moved to its present site in front of St. Peter's.

And the work was done in those days by men with feeble animal muscles, IN ABOUT THE SAME FASHION AS THE ANTS MOVE A BIG CATERPILLAR TO-DAY.

The handling of this great stone was a mighty problem to the men of those days. Remember that men worked entirely with the power in the muscles of men and of horses and other beasts of burden. The use of steam and electricity was unknown. There were no great steel cranes that we now see everywhere lifting iron beams to the tops of buildings.

The great stone had to be moved from one place to another and lifted into its position by the muscles of men and horses.

A master workman of great skill, Domenico Fontana, was selected to plan and supervise the work. In accordance with the custom of the day two rewards were put before him. He was to be well paid and highly honored if he set the stone safely upon its new foundation. He was to lose his life if he failed and broke the precious obelisk.

Mr. Deshler Welch thus describes in the Scientific American the work of raising the stone and the tragic incident that would have resulted in failure but for the courage of a sailor, who cried out the needed advice, in spite of the edict which had threatened with death any man who with sound or excitement of any kind should disturb the work of raising the great stone:

The transference of the tremendous block of stone was accompanied by some remarkable ceremonies, and an interest that was full of dramatic, almost tragic, intensity. It was placed on great rollers that had been carefully prepared and tested. Fontana superintended every detail in the lowering of the shaft, that was much more easily accomplished than the raising of it, as you shall presently see. And well might the task prove strenuous to Fontana, for was not there the penalty of his head should he fail? Eight hundred men and one hundred and fifty horses were employed in the transportation, and thousands of people watched every moment of its progress. All the preparations for hoisting the shaft when it finally arrived on the piazza were made with great care, and completed with much solemnity. Every possible expediency seemed to have been considered; and, indeed, so far had everything been provided for, that the Pope issued an edict threatening death to man, woman or child who should utter a single word or manifest any excitement while the stone was being lifted into place, so fearful was he lest the slightest diverting of attention from the work, or annoying agitation by those surrounding it, might cause a fatal blunder.

Forty-six huge cranes had been put in place, at various points reckoned with skill and ingenuity. When all was ready the great square was covered at all sides, sufficiently beyond the working space, by a vast concourse of people. The neighboring housetops were also occupied, and Pope Sixtus and his officers of state and government held a commanding position.

Never had a greater crowd assembled in Rome. The silence of it was so awesome that there seemed to be something portentous and ominous to a degree of terror. Finally there appeared to be a concerted movement among the workmen, and the great hempen cables of the cranes were seen to tighten and then to move—and then the stone monster began slowly to rise. Everything seemed to proceed so victoriously that at last there appeared to be but a few inches to overcome when the shaft would find its absolute perpendicularity and settle on its new base—when the hoisting suddenly stopped! It was seen that the ropes were yielding! Fontana had neglected to allow for their tension. A feeling of personal dismay

The Story of the Great St. Peter's Obelisk, the Sailor Who Braved Death and Made His Family Rich. The Progress of Man from the Insect Age of Development.

[illegible] through the mind of every one. The situation was attained to a tragic intensity, but suddenly, in that deathly silent assurance a voice rang out.

Acqua alle funi!

It was a desperate cry from one of the multitude to throw water on the ropes. Quick as a flash the workmen seized upon the vital meaning of these words that hurled like an arrow across the open space. The man that shouted them had no fear of the penalty, he was a sailor who knew his ropes and saw the only way out of an impending catastrophe.

Without an instant's delay bucket after bucket was carried from a nearby fountain and dashed upon the cordage. As the strands shrank under the inspired baptism they drew the obelisk into place.

It is difficult to imagine a more dramatic scene than that—eight hundred men, one hundred and fifty horses scattered as you see them in the picture on this page, tugging at hundreds of ropes, a vast, breathless crowd looking on, silent as death, in fear of death itself; the stretching of the ropes, the impending calamity that would have dashed the magnificent stone to pieces—and at the right moment the voice of the man who knew what to do—and saved the situation, regardless of the death threat.

The story tells us that the sailor was Bresca, and that as a reward for his courage and knowledge the Pope granted to him and his family of San Remo as long as the family should last the privilege and profit of providing the palms to be used in St. Peter's on Palm Sunday. And in the little old town of San Remo, just beyond the Monte Carlo gambling tables, where the plucky sailor's family lived, are gathered to this day most of the palms used in St. Peter's and in many other Catholic churches throughout the world.

The picture that you see on this page is reproduced from a very old engraving, and it shows you how Rome in front of St. Peter's looked only a little while after Columbus had started to discover this country.

Beside the picture of the old engineering work of raising the obelisk, the kind of work which men have now outgrown, we show you a smaller picture of the engineering work done by the ants when they move a caterpillar to their nest. Such engineering work as this—done by many insects thousands of years before Rome was built, AND DONE IN EXACTLY THE SAME WAY BY THE SAME INSECTS OUT IN YOUR GARDEN TO-DAY, IS FAR MORE WONDERFUL THAN THE WORK WHICH THE PIGMY MEN UNDER THE ORDERS OF POPE SIXTUS V. ARE DOING IN THE OLD ENGRAVING.

When the tiny ants move a big caterpillar, when the bees hermetically seal up in wax the mouse that creeps into their hive, when the mud wasp stings its victim in just the right spot between two vertebrae, so that the victim will not die but remain unconscious and good to eat until the young wasps hatch and are ready to eat it—and at many other times in their engineering lives the insects that we know are far more wonderful and able than were the old engineers of the fifteenth century tugging with their little ropes at the block of stone.

But the insects do not progress, and man does progress. In four hundred years we have replaced tiny twelve-hundred-pound horses tugging at a rope with the great steam cranes, with which our engineers work at Panama and elsewhere. To-day the raising of that obelisk would be mere child's play to our engineers, and a child with one finger could release the power that would lift the stone into place. There would be no need of threatening with death the man that should utter a cry as the stone went up. For we work to-day not with the power of slaves controlled by fear of death, but with the powers of nature—steam and electricity, controlled by the genius of man—a mighty

The Tragedy of Child Labor

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

THE whole world, it would seem, must feel deep sympathy for the little girls of Chattanooga, Tenn., who tried to commit suicide recently to escape from the life of drudgery in the cotton mill.

Vera Wesley, fourteen years old, [illegible] years in the mills of that city, [illegible] the third girl [illegible] this year.

Last summer it revealed the fact that a [illegible] had been [illegible] by several of her companions [illegible] factory.

"We [illegible] to die at our frames and [illegible] bed. We go to work [illegible] in the morning and work [illegible] at night. We get only Saturday afternoons off, and we never have any time to play or go anywhere except to the mill and back home again. So we all made up our minds we wanted to die. Little Bertha McCahey cries and says she would rather be dead than alive. Bertha says she has no one to support but her uncle, but she can't do that any longer. We'd all rather die than work as hard as we have been in the mill."

Some years ago I visited a cotton mill in Georgia. It was one of the best conducted mills in the South and there was a school in connection with it giving the children advantages it was claimed they did not receive on the dissolute farms of the South from which they came.

Yet the sight was depressing in the extreme, as the sight of children working night or ten hours a day must always be depressing to any one possessed of sensibilities, understanding what childhood is meant for by the Creator, viz., a season for growth, development and innocent pleasures.

It has been argued that most of our great men were obliged to work hard in their childhood. Benjamin Franklin, Abraham Lincoln and many others can be quoted who were early compelled to take burdens on mind and body. Yet these men never worked in mills or in mines, or in factories shut away from the sunlight and fresh air, and subjected to the nerve racking sounds and conditions of modern child slaves.

I saw children of tender ages working child and [illegible] day wearing rag [illegible] and other oriental countries. But their situation, even considering the very small remuneration they receive, is less distressing than that of our children in the mills and mines of America.

All work in the Orient is virtually done out of doors, and the climate is complete. Old and old and young, to obtain the benefits of sun and air. Knowing how miserable are the conditions of our great factories and mills, for children and mental well being of growing children, it seems incredible that any mom can write in favor of down a child opponent to the freedom and education of our little ones, as has done Francis E. Livsey, of Clarkson, Md.

"Now that your State has passed a child labor law must plodding to the National Child Labor Committee of New York City, the next propaganda will be for the passage of the law that always goes with it, compulsory education.

"With these two passed, your State will develop into all the child labor, juvenile crime, abandoned farms, abandoned homes and lack of parental authority that is witnessed in the States of the North and West.

"New York is a sample of one of these States, where a law is about being passed to put the vagrants, with which it is overrun, on farms. They were compelled to be educated away from labor in the first place, and they are now to be compelled back to it. Boys that run away from school and home to undertake to beat labor are arrested and sent back to school to get their minds and muscles educated out of work."

George Bleasc, of South Carolina, has also made a statement which ranks him with the antiquated minds of bygone eras, when might was synonymous with right, and when to own a child or animal, meant the right to misuse, starve, beat, or neglect the human or dumb chattel, and no one had power to prevent.

The objection of the last named individual reads as follows:

"I am absolutely opposed to compulsory education. Compulsory education in the hands of the State means the destruction of the home, for it destroys the authority of the parents and places the paid agents of the State in control of the children, thereby destroying family government. Those agents stand between the child and the parent—they represent the State—they are not responsible to the parents. They implant in the minds of the children the view of the State and virtually say, 'We have taken you out of bondage and made you free; no are giving you what your unnatural parents would not give you'

"Family government and parental responsibility antedate all others, and it is possible for wild, extravagant and madly enthusiastic men, who see theory and theory only, to destroy family government, alienate children from their parents and force the home into a scene of strife, rebellion and wretchedness. The Bible says a great deal about obedience to parents and reverence for parents, and, believing in that book and its teachings as strongly as I do, and for the sake of our children, our country and for the future, I believe in letting the parents keep within their own control the rearing and education of their children."

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

If family government and parental authority had never been interfered with by advanced thinkers and wise humanitarians, the race would still be savage, and mound-builders and cliff-dwellers would be our highest types of civilization.

If children had not been aided and abetted to seek and find better creeds, better ideals of living and better occupations than their parents gave them, there would be no arts, no inventions, no progress in the world to-day.

Whenever a parent manifests AN UNSELFISH DESIRE FOR HIS CHILD TO MAKE THE UTMOST POSSIBLE OF HIS LIFE, parental authority and family government" meet no obstacle unless it is in the child, who is blind to his own best interests and prefers play to study. And so in his case, as in the case of children put to work at a tender age by their parents, COMPULSORY EDUCATION IS THE OUTREACHING HAND OF GOD TO HELP UPLIFT HUMANITY.

There is nothing holy, nothing great, nothing noble, about the bringing of the physical body of a child into life unless its parents have high ideals and a sense of responsibility in regard to the mental and moral development of the child.

Any insect, animal or fowl can produce young.

The fact that a man and a woman have produced a child gives them no right whatever to direct that child's life in a manner which stunts its brain, warps its understanding and endangers its physical wellbeing. In Manila, shortly after the United States took possession, a native man was cruelly beating an overloaded mule.

When an agent for the Humane Society arrested him he became violently angry. He said the mule was his property and no one had any right to interfere if he chose to kill the animal.

Great was his amazement when he learned that EVERYBODY had a right to interfere in the United States with any man who misused his animals or his children.

The Governor of South Carolina and the man from Maryland seem to place themselves alongside of the Filipino in their ideals of the rights of parents.

It will be a blessed thing for the south, the North, the East and the West if compulsory education DOES MEAN THE DISRUPTION of the home when that home stands for cruelty to children in the form of child labor in unsanitary and noisy mills and the loss of the best years of childhood for physical and mental growth.

It is only a hundred years ago when a prominent member of Parliament in England made an impassioned speech much in the same line with the Governor's letter opposing the bill to FREE CHILDREN UNDER TWELVE YEARS OF AGE FROM WORKING FOURTEEN HOURS A DAY IN DARK MINES!

Several children had died and others had been brought out fainting from the underground prisons, when a brave humanitarian introduced a bill to allow no children under fourteen in the mines and to limit their hours of TOIL.

The noble member of Parliament, in tears, spoke of the terrible crime of interfering with PARENTAL AUTHORITY.

Thank God that the world is growing more enlightened, and that men like the member of Parliament, like Governor Blease and like Francis Livsey are so in the minority to-day that they stand forth in a blaze of light which reveals their shameful selfishness in a most unpleasant manner to the rapidly increasing ranks of humanitarians.

There is no need of child labor in our opulent land, it must go with other crimes against growing generations. Indolent, dissipated, selfish, vicious and ignorant parents must all come under the jurisdiction of the LAW. And they must yield the training of their children to others who have made a study of childhood and its rights and needs, and have the interests of humanity at heart. Family government and parental authority must be made words void of meaning, unless they mean the best interests of the children and the race.

As the editor of the Tennessee American has well said:

"Any man whose heart is so hard that he favors forcing little children into factories and opposes their education is unworthy of modern civilization. His views hark back to the Dark Ages, to the days of ignorance and degradation.

The little fourteen-year-old Knoxville girl who tried to kill herself because of the grinding labor she endured in a factory, and incidentally revealed a suicide compact among a number of children similarly treated who worked constantly and had no time for play, preached a better sermon against child labor than all the newspaper writers in America can prepare."

When Men Worked Like Ants

progress. If man has accomplished so much in less than five centuries, what will he not accomplish in the hundreds of thousands of centuries that stretch ahead of him on this planet?

This is one lesson in this old engraving of the ant-like men tugging at the great stone.

Unlimited are the possibilities of man's development. That wonderful genius of man who now puts in motion the shuttles of steel or uses the power of the magnet to load steel rails on the cars will do in the future work which will make our engineering of to-day seem childish in than the engineering revealed in this engraving.

Men used to harness the power of horses, oxen, elephants and camels. Now they harness steam and electricity and the big waterfalls.

In the days to come they will harness the tides—the power of our moon AND THEY WILL HARNESS THE POWER OF THE GREAT SUN IT SELF. Our cosmic father, the sun will do all the work here for his children. The material power of man will be absolutely unlimited. This earth, on every inch of its surface, will be cultivated, crossed, irrigated, warmed or cooled as man shall choose to have it. The excessive heat of the equator will be sent to the poles. Man, who now stand shivering in a cave, now regulates the heat in his great palaces. The earth will some day be one great palace, with everything in it and on it regulated by man. He will have become all-powerful THROUGH HIS OWN GENIUS, BY HIS OWN EFFORTS MADE FREE FROM FEAR, DESPISING LIMITATIONS, TRUSTING IN HIMSELF.

* * *

There is another lesson in this old engraving and the story that it tells—the importance of courage and the ignoring of rules and regulations at the right time.

The voice of the brave sailor, Breaut, that called out to the men to put water on the ropes, is a voice to remember when you are in doubt, when hesitation or fear keeps you back.

That voice of the sailor not afraid of death has been heard many a time in the world's history.

It was heard when Cromwell took England from a king and gave the country to the people.

It was heard in this country when Patrick Henry spoke and when calmer, abler men wrote his brave speech into laws and a Constitution. It was heard when Camille Desmoulins jumped upon a table in the Palais Royal, and when Mirabeau made his great speech in the Salle du Jeu de Paume.

Sooner or later the man is found with the courage to speak as that sailor spoke in the silent, sweetrack throng. And when the voice is heard, another milestone is passed—another task accomplished. That has been mankind's glorious history from the darkness of the first days until now. And until the end of time the voice of courage and of genius speaking in the silence will solve the problems of men and demonstrate their power.

Brain Twists---Facts About the Curious Working of Your Thinking Faculties.

HAVE you ever thought of how your brain works? Most people handle their brains work as a whole, but modern science says this is not so. The newest theory is that the brain is to the world like a big department store. When ribbons are wanted it is only the ribbon department that is consulted. Similarly your brain has innumerable tiny aides, corresponding to your various accomplishments and branches of knowledge, from billiard playing to speaking French. When you start to study a foreign language, or a musical instrument, you are literally carving a new niche in your brain.

The brain is like a big department store in another way a store stopped with under new running to each department in the brain these are represented by a maze of tiny arteries carrying blood. Just as the baby pipes on one particular floor might burst and ruin the goods in that department alone so if the walls of an artery in the brain are weakened by poisoned blood, the blood may burst through and ruin that par- ar niche. Many a man has risen in the morning to find out that he has, say, forgotten how to read. Or if the damage is less wide, he may have forgotten how to read his own language and still be able to read an other language he knows. This might also happen as the result of an accident. You might lose the use of a small part of your brain, and yet be of no rest of your faculties intact.

Even in the niches there are fine subdivisions. The various parts of speech for instance, are arranged in a distance akin like books on a shelf. And just as the books on a shelf may be squeezed so tight that some of them will burst out, so a tumor on a language shelf may jam all the grammatical parts of speech so that the patient is aphasic. It is known that on that shelf the verbs are placed first, the pronouns next, the prepositions and adverbs next, and so forth.

The reason is that our verbs are the things we learn first, long before nouns. A baby says long before it knows what is seen. The nouns that we learn last, and so forget soonest, are people's names. That is why old people have such bad memories for names.

Only a child can teach it. A man with his utterance niche ruined struggles in vain to use the reserve one. It is too old to be taught. But many a child has been struck dumb and taught its other brain. It has, however, to start all over again with "Mamma" and "Dada," even at the age of nine or ten.

Corns Come Out Just as Easy!

The New Surprise, "Gets-It."

"GETS-IT" is [illegible] every man and woman who has [illegible] corns, warts or bunions, ought to try "GETS-IT" at once and see how marvelously it works. It may be hard for you to believe it, until you experience the results yourself.

"GETS-IT" is remarkable because it never irritates or turns the true flesh sore or raw. It cuts off a corn as easy as water. Stockings won't stick to it. Corn pains stop. The corn or callous shrivels up. It comes out and blessed relief.

Quit shaving your corn with a razor. You may draw blood and cause blood poisoning.

TO-DAY'S INSTALMENT

"Well, the likelihood, don't you know, that a Frenchwoman—raised to pennyroyal, afraid of being caught, yet spurred by necessity—would snatch at anything familiar that sprang into her head, when hearing that she was obliged to give name and address?

"The fact that she wasn't English herself would make her cautious to choose something she felt sure was quite English, lest she should make a mistake, and rouse suspicion. Sue suddenly found herself thinking of Rayne and Deedar Lodge; so she changed Rayne into Raynesou, unconsciously, and shot it out upon a wierd sort of combination.

"And as she's very likely living in lodgings in some Crescent, in Westbourne Grove, she picked that on for her landlord."

"That hangs together plausibly," said Barrows, pleased with the young man's building up of one deduction on another. "I suppose you think she's in Westbourne Grove because she went to a small place like Ghirlli's, of whose existence she wouldn't have known unless she'd happen to pass it."

Not Certain

"Exactly," replied Gaylor.

"Can you get this Lizzie's photograph?"

"I shouldn't wonder if Mrs. Barnard of the Home Farm, or some one among the servants at Briary Moat has it—if she ever had any taken; and it's likely she did, as she was said to be vain. Possibly she may have sat to the local photographer in this case, he'll have the negative."

"When the girl disappeared some months ago, apparently neither Lady Hereward nor her husband applied to the police?"

"No. I don't think they believed in a case for police interference. Lady Hereward may have said some hasty things to Barr, whom she was in a rage with him, but there was no real idea that the French maid had met with foul play. Barr may have helped her with a little money, until after the murder, since when I should say he'd had his hands full—and perhaps his pockets empty. If supplies from him were stopped, that would account for the girl's joining the vanity box."

"Of course we aren't absolutely certain yet that this thing's the one we're been after," resumed Barrows, indicating the bold case in his desk. "It hasn't been identified by any one who knew Lady Hereward, though it answers the description. Unfortunately, there's nothing very distinctive about it. But Sir Ian Hereward arrives this evening, seven o'clock, Victoria station; I thought of sending you to meet him; but the best thing you can do is to go on the track of Liane, Marquise du Pont sur Ian."

"My name isn't Gaylor if I don't find her by the time they've landed Barr at Dover," said the young detective, who was now in such good spirits that he couldn't resist the temptation to boast a little. "I think you can rely on me."

"You can have any help you want," suggested his superior.

"Thank you, but I should like to do it on my own."

A Presentiment of Evil

Terry Ricardo was curiously anxious about Sig Ian.

Her anxiety amounted to a presentiment of evil; but what kind of evil she could not define.

The morning after her arrival with Nora Verney at St. Pierre de Chartreuse he bade her good bye, saying that he must return immediately to England. And she did not remind him that he had said, because of Major Smedley, he would remain at St Pierre for a day or two longer.

Of course, everything was different now, on account of Ian Barr. Sir Ian did not say that Barr's fate had anything to do with the changes of plan, but Terry was sure it had, just as much as it had to do with hers.

The annoyance that they had been suffered from Major Smedley's official appearel as nothing now, looked back upon after the sensational incident of the evening. It did not seem to matter much, somehow, Terry thought, what Major Smedley thought or did; so it could hardly be fear of trouble from that quarter which had altered Sig Ian's looks for the worse since the night before.

He had been haggered then, but he was more haggered now, and it was for trust of him today than if he had been when the thought first came into her mind, that he had left all of them together.

In saying farewell, his eyes lingered with a kind of anguished longing on Terry's face—the face that he has once more, unfortunately, described as "beautiful"; the face whose resemblance he had been wont to seek in the old portrait at Rising Wood.

"Why, you look at me as if we were never going to meet again" she exclaimed, on a frightened impulse, as she wrung her hand.

"Perhaps we never shall," he answered "One can't be sure, can one?"

"But I have promised Nora to go back to England at once," said Terry. "Fate is against my staying more than twenty-four hours at St. Pierre de Chartreuse, it seems. But never mind! I have seen the sweet little place again—and talked to you here. I shall have another good memory. And we shall meet in England soon. You know, Ian, I want to be your friend."

"I could never be your friend Terry," he protested.

Would Like a Letter

"Nonsense! You said 'nonsense' to me once. I say it to you now. Please tell me where you will be in England. Not at—"

"Friars' Moat? Oh, no! I can't bear the thought of the place. I don't know where I shall go."

"Oh, how dreary not to know! You have many friends, who must have asked you to their houses because they wanted you to be with them, and let them comfort you."

"No one can comfort me."

"Not yet. But by and by it will be different. Won't you stay with some friend near—Riding st. Mary?"

"I couldn't do that. I think I shall go straight to a London hotel."

"Which one? I want to know," Terry persisted, "because I might wish to write to you."

His face brightened faintly. "Would you write to me?" he asked. "I—should like to have a letter from you."

"But about?" Terry inquired, smiling.

"Anything! Just to hear from you. To have a letter."

"You shall have one," she assured him "As good a letter as I know how to write. The letter of a friend to a friend."

"Will you write it on the boat, or in the train between Dover and London, and post it when you get to town?" Sir Ian pleaded anxiously.

"Why on the boat or in the train?"

"Because I should like to have the thoughts almost warm from your hand, when they reach me."

"I could write it after arriving in London, if you want them so very fresh!"

"No," said Sir Ian. "Please post the letter immediately on your arrival. I might be gone from the address I shall give you, if you didn't do that."

"Very well," Terry consented "I will post it immediately, or send it by a messenger."

"Thank you with all my heart for its promise. Address me at Harland's Hotel Charles street, Pall Mall."

"I never heard of it," said Terry. "Is it a new hotel, since my day?"

"No, it is very old, I believe. But it's small and insignificant. Comparatively few people know of its existence. It's not a very bright or gay place; but for that reason it will suit me the better now. And you? Shall you go to Mrs. Hilverden?"

As to Jealousy---By Elbert Hubbard

Copyright, 1911, by International News Service

I ONCE heard Dr. James Bryce Hayward, lecturer on pathology at Bellevue, make a statement to the effect that cancer was caused something like this:

"In moments of good will, when the mind is calm, the circulation is complete, strong and natural, the secretions are active, the pores open and the glands do their perfect work. Let a spasm of hate and fear sweep over a person and the heart thumps in wild alarm and then stops. Then until you can scarcely detect its throb, the pores close and the secretions cease as though a simoon of death had swept over the body. There is congestion, then fever, and nature is working hard to restore an equilibrium. That is just the way cancer grows. There is a stoppage in the circulation, and nature tries to clear it away by sending more blood to the part. This increased burden causes a growth to form, and while the cells are always working to general laws, not caring for individual, kills the patient in an effort to cure him."

There is no form of woe that will cause a suffering so terrible as jealousy. It grows by what it feeds upon—on poison! Ah, it clutches for it, even though it knows it is poison. It lies in wait, it watches, it listens, and finding the proof it wants, suffers now than ever. It suffers if it finds proof, and suffers if it doesn't.

For bodily pain nature is pitiful and quickly sends insensibility. But for the woes of the heart there is only lingering torture—nights of tossing unrest, and days of jagging, leaden misery. In bereavement by death there soon comes calm and sweet peace in thought of the virtues of the loved one gone. We consider and dwell upon the good that was in the dead. But in jealousy we think only of the worst in the living. It is a blasting, withering hate toward that which we love best. It corrodes the heart and makes a man hate himself. It forms a trinity of hate—hate for the woman he loves, hate for the suspected person and hate for himself.

That is why it stings so—the jealous person cannot justify himself. And so those who are most jealous always suffer they are not so at all, and scout the idea in hysterical emphasis.

So far, the passion of jealousy has never been analyzed. Many men have written upon it, and all they attempt to do is to describe its manifestations. The cause of jealousy is never equal to the tragedy that tears and rends the soul.

Who can explain why a woman with a great and tender love for a man will at times tantalize him into a frenzy? Who can tell why the simple-hearted Moor, Othello, who loved the great Desdemona, should conceive such a fiend for her, suggested by a dimay and groundless suspicion, that he takes her life? Where the insurrections of the heart are born that wreck and rend the souls of men is to us unguessed—we simply do not know.

Jealousy seems a sort of rudimentary savage instinct that has come down to us from a time when its manifestation was a violence that knew no restraint, but with teeth and with claw struck its object dead, so only the strongest survived. But now we hold the savage hate in check, and jealousy, instead of hurting the other person worst, hurts worst the one who is jealous. We beg the hate and let it grow at our vitals and poison all the well springs with its venom.

Separation is better than lingering death. But jealousy may possibly come to the front coupled with holy deed each other. In it always is the element of dissatisfaction with self, and no pain and disappointment equals this —when we are disappointed with ourselves.

Yet very seldom are we quite honest and frank with ourselves. Instead of laying the blame at home we bestow it upon another person. That is the worst. The man who is jealous is himself to blame for the most part.

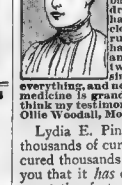
Does Your Backache?

If you are a woman and you have this symptom get Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound without delay.

Backache seems an invention of the evil one to try woman's souls. Only those who suffer this way can understand the wearing, ceaseless misery.

We ask all such women to read the following letter for proof that Pinkham's Compound cures backache caused by woman's diseases.



Morton's Gap, Kentucky.—"I suffered two years with female disorders, my health was very bad and I had a continual backache which was simply awful. I could not stand on my feet long enough to cook a meal's victuals without my back nearly killing me, and I would have such dragging sensations I could hardly bear it. I had soreness on each side, could not stand tight clothing, and was irregular. I was completely run down. On advice I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills and am enjoying good health. It is now about two years and I have not had an ache or pain since. I do all my own work, washing and everything, and never have the backache any more. I think your medicine is grand and I praise it to all my neighbors. If you think my testimony will help others you may publish it."—Mrs. Ollie Woodall, Morton's Gap, Kentucky.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made thousands of cures of such cases. You notice we say has cured thousands of cases. That means that we are telling you that it has done, not what we think it will do. We are stating facts, not guesses.

We challenge the world to name another remedy for woman's ills which has been so successful or received so many testimonials as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

The testimonials which are constantly being published in the Pinkham advertisements are guaranteed to be absolutely genuine, honest, and given without reward in any way whatever.

"The Finest Children I Ever Met"

By NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright 1911 [illegible]

BELOW is the first part of a story written by Miss Brinkley of her visit to Georgian Court, the home of Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould, and her talk with two of the Gould children, Miss Edith and Baby Gloria.

The second part of Miss Brinkley's story, accompanied by additional attractive pictures of the Gould children, for which they especially posed, will be printed on Magazine page of the Evening AMERICAN to-morrow.

EDITH GOULD.

GLORIA THE BABY.

Miss Brinkley Describes Her Visit to the Wonderful Georgian Court.

PART I.

IT was hot in town that day. Hot so that the hair of girls hugged temples and neck in little wet circles—hot so that tempers turned tender—and the fine wine of living flat and stale. The world drooped and sweated, dust gathered thick and golden on the sunny windows of the cars. The world seemed suddenly full of little useless noises; babies cried and shoes creaked, and the streets outside fairly rattled. Everybody in the long rows of seats waiting for their trains sagged, and everybody on their feet walked in a jaded, persistent sort of bravery. New York crowded close down on folks who happened to come from the big prairies and the high hills, showing all the ugliness in her chameleon face. It was a bad day for exiles. It made me sick for dry air and the lands that lie close to the sky. And then I left it.

For Georgian Court, the place where Mrs. George Gould's babies were all left. One is a real baby, and the other has only the elbows, the knees, the nose of that adorable state left. Some one went to call them, and I waited in a big cool room with its door lying open to the blue sky and the green outside. It didn't seem a house. Flower odors drifted in and out. The wind of all the outdoors lifted the white leaves of books and idly swung the tapestry fringes to and fro. From somewhere bird-calls lifted into the air in sharp music, and from out of the garden, through a door that framed a mosaic of blue sky and waving tree plumes and the bright flickering of a fountain against the sun, came the drowsy, monotonous chatter and bickering of parrots. And through it all, and over it all, persisted a queer singing that I knew and yet couldn't remember. While I rubbed the brown plush ears, with their chamois-like lining, of a little fat spaniel I tried to remember that high, organ-like singing and the why of its mysterious peace. And then out of the green of the garden into the cool of the room came the two "babies." One was tall and dark and—limping! The other was little and tawny headed and incredulous.

"It was very, very careless of you," said the tall, dark one. "I'm in terrible pain," and one little white-socked foot dragged painfully and one little chubby, tanned hand pressed her hip like an old man with the "misery."

The tiny, tawny-headed one looked even more mocking and unrepentant. Unbelief danced in her black eyes. When they were each on a side of me I asked about it.

"What was it?" I said.

"Gloria," said Edith, with accusing black eyes on the little elfish face on the other side of me, "pushed me against the balustrade coming up the steps—and INJURED me. And now I'm in terrible pain!"

But Gloria, the sinner, preserved a deep silence and her eyes still shone their unbelief. Their little knees were rubbed and soiled, their linen dresses rumpled and covered with the marks of strenuous play, both of their heads were half wet and heavy from swimming, so a little German woman carried them both away up into the inner regions of this flower-filled playhouse to be fluffed and fussed. And the baby promised over her little tanned shoulder that she would come back "crimped." And she did.

MARBLEHEAD HELPS FLOATING HOSPITAL

Society Entertained by Vaudeville by Little Ones From Mercy Ship.

Marblehead society has been interested in Boston's Floating Hospital since it was established and many of the Summer visitors have given large sums to keep in existence this deserving charity. A group of little people from the hospital gave a vaudeville entertainment at the Kerr cottage at Marblehead Neck, which was well attended. The Floating Hospital has been in the harbor recently and many of the shore contingent were guests of the staff for the afternoon, showing the visitors the needs of the great work and the success that is the result of their efforts. Quite a sum was made for the hospital, which has been badly in need of [illegible] this season.

Colonel Pope, whose prominence in the automobile world is so wide, is among the late arrivals at the Marblehead shore, where he is registered at the [illegible].

Pay Director and Mrs. Charles W. Littlefield of the Magnolia colony motored up to this shore with their house guests, Mr. and Mrs. A. Watson Armour of Lake Forest, Ill. Mr. Armour is the son of Mrs. Littlefield, whose wedding took place about a year ago. Pay Director Littlefield was for years a resident of Marblehead, making his headquarters at the Eastern Yacht Club.

James J. Storrow has gone abroad for a short stay, to be absent about a month. Mrs. Storrow, who is in deep mourning, will remain at the family home here. They will not return to their town house until late in the Fall.

Mr. and Mrs. King Upton, who have passed so much of the Summer aboard their yacht, arrived home [illegible] the week. They will remain but a short time, however, planning one more long cruise before the season closes.

Mr. and Mrs. James Beaumont Noyes, who are at the Marblehead shore this year, are making some enviable records with their yawl Spectre, which is registered in the Eastern Yacht Club.

Mr. and Mrs. Bertram G. Waters have left their country home and come here for the late season, hoping that the change of air will hasten the recovery of Mr. Waters, who has been seriously ill for some months.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin A. Shuman have returned to their Summer home, "Medhurst," Marblehead Neck, after an extended cruise to Newport in their auxiliary sloop Hettie, where they were participants in the New York Yacht Club races and festivities.

CHATHAM.

The principal diversion for many of the Summer people at this stage of the season is the moonlight sailing parties that are in order nearly every evening. The chief point of interest for these parties at present is the wreck of the schooner Theresa Wolf, lying just outside of North harbor. The Summer visitors have hard work to understand how such a vessel could be forced so far to the windward by an invisible current.

Miss Rebecca Harding, a teacher in the Springfield schools, is spending her vacation at her home here and is entertaining Miss Clara D. Frost of that city.

DAZZLING CARNIVAL COMING AT REVERE

Lighting Effects to Be Elaborate and Other Decorations Will Be Beautiful.

As the time for Revere's great carnival approaches, the visitors to this shore appreciate more and more how much the celebrating this year will eclipse that of former seasons. The lighting effects are to be the most attractive, the decorations beautiful, and the promised entertainments well worth a visit. Charles Ridgeway, who has the carnival in charge, is putting much effort into it, to prove to the State Commissioners that the affair can be carried through as the business men have wanted it for some time without any element of risk.

Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Menley are among the entertainers of the week, having a house party for their daughter, Miss Anastasia Menley. Among the guests were Miss Agnes Tobin, Miss Jennie [illegible], Miss Alice Tobin, Miss Catharine Hagan and Miss Mary Thompson.

Miss Francis Martin of South Boston is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Regan over the weekend. She is the sister of Mrs. Regan and has been a visitor here for several Summers.

Mr. and Mrs. John Barnard have returned from Onset, where they have been passing the last few weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Pratt of Worcester have joined the beach colony for the coming two weeks, having a cottage for their sojourn.

Mr. and Mrs. Eben Jones of Boston are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Miles Randall at their shore home. They will remain over the holiday.

Miss Mary McCarthy of Boston has arrived for her vacation, being the guest of Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Davis, the latter of whom was her schoolmate.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward French of Lynn are among those to take a cottage for the late season. They will remain through September.

Miss Alice Casey gave a musicale at her cottage home on the shore, entertaining twelve guests. Her house guest was among the contributors of the evening, giving several delightful solos on the 'cello. Miss Mary and Miss Margaret Hanrahan played duets, and Miss Katherine O'Connor read.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Lane of Brockton motored down during the week for a short stay with Mr. and Mrs. George Macey.

MARION.

The coming tournament of the Sippican Tennis Club will be a drawing card for the society people about here, and many notable players will be here next week. The cup is given by Mrs. Stanley McCormick of Chicago, who is a regular Summer resident at her Silver Shells villa. To be owner of this cup it must be won three times. Dwight F. Davis of St. Louis, who is also a Summer resident, has won the trophy twice.

Dr. Ernest Humphrey of Boston is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. D. R. Roy at the Moorings.

Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Briggs of Tuscana, Tex., are visiting Mr. and Mrs. S. [illegible] Briggs for the month end.

Miss Amelia Hurnell of New York is a guest of Mr. and Mrs. John Allaunch.

Miss Theo. Littlefield of Abington has been numbered among the Summer visitors.

FAT REDUCTION IS NO SIN

The purpose of beauty is to refine the native uncouthness of human nature. We all bow to its power. It is the only autocracy that has no nihilist shadow. Alas! this means the fat woman must serve instead of rule, for beauty in woman is a composite of both line and feature.

Thousands of fat women are beautiful of face. But they lag behind in the race for preference—because a too ponderous outline dashes the favor their face has gained them.

Now, pretty fat women can reduce that fat (not the good pure-lined flesh) in a very simple way. No exercise—no dieting is necessary. Let them take one Marmola Prescription Tablet after each meal and at bedtime for a month. The fat will simply fade. No wrinkles or pouches of skin will form, but the loss will be uniform. The fat will go as stealthily as it came; [illegible] health will improve, the eye [illegible] brilliant, the wit sprightlier. Marmola Tablets are [illegible] being made from the famous fashionable prescription: ½ oz. Marmola, ½ oz. Fl. Ex. Cascara Aromatic, 3½ oz. Peppermint Water, and are likewise cheap. HOW GRACE BENSON BECAME FAMOUS FOR THE BEAUTY OF HER HANDS AND ARMS.

Free Prescription That Can Be Prepared at Home Without Expense.

Grace Benson, famous for the marvelous beauty of her hands and arms, in a recent interview, says: "If I could tell every woman about the prescription that has caused all this talk about my hands and arms they could every one of them make their hands and arms just as beautiful as mine, I am glad to have the opportunity to give my recipe free to the world. It will help every woman to improve her personal appearance." When I asked her if she would allow me to publish the prescription, she quickly answered: "Certainly, only too glad to have you do it." Then she sat down and wrote it on a slip of paper and handed it to me. Here it is: "Go to any drug store, get an empty two-ounce bottle, also a one-ounce bottle of Kuhn's Compound. Pour the entire bottle of Kuhn's into the two-ounce bottle, add quarter of an ounce of witch hazel, then fill with water. Apply night and morning." She further said: "This prescription makes the skin transparent and removes all defects, such as freckles, tan, sun spots, roughness and ruddiness. A single application works a marvelous transformation." Where low collars are worn it can be applied to the neck with equally as startling results. It is absolutely harmless, and will positively not stimulate or produce a growth of hair.

Society Sitting as a Jury in the Case Brings in a Scotch Verdict Concerning Miss Eleanora Sears' Engagement to New Yorker.

THE jury has returned a Scotch verdict in the case of Miss Eleonora Sears and Harold Sterling Vanderbilt.

The jury is composed of Society, with the capital "S," ordinary society with the small "s," the world in general and the newspaper world in particular. The verdict is:

"We find Miss Sears and Mr. Vanderbilt guilty of being engaged, but we can't prove it."

To which the unabashed young couple reply cheerily: "You can't prove it by us, either."

Everybody who is in society doings or who follows them through the papers gravely believes that these two people are engaged. But it must be proved because the evidence to conflict is lacking.

Formal Announcement Expected.

That evidence must take the form of a formal announcement by Mrs. Frederick Sears of Beacon street, mother of Miss Sears that her daughter is betrothed to Harold Sterling Vanderbilt. That announcement is not forthcoming so far that, outside the usual announcement, it is regarded as a certainty that an engagement exists and is to be announced in due time.

Hence the Scotch verdict: "Guilty, but not proved."

As to the evidence

First, the principals themselves. They are constantly in each other's society. You can't escape them in the smarter crowds. For instance:

Newport—Miss Eleonora Sears is the guest at Marble House of Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, mother of Harold S. Vanderbilt.

Manchester-by-the-Sea—Harold S. Vanderbilt and Miss Eleonora Sears motored here today from Newport. Harry will stay at the Sears summer place here for a few days, returning to Newport.

Newport—Miss Eleonora Sears and Harold S. Vanderbilt are back at Marble House from Manchester-by-the-Sea, where they have been entertained by Miss Sears' parents.

Newport—Miss Eleonora Sears and Mr Harold S. Vanderbilt were among the guests tonight at a dinner dance given at The Shoal by Mrs. E. J. Berwind.

On the Tennis Courts.

Newport—Among the interested spectators at the tennis tournament today was Miss Eleonora Sears. She was attended by Harold S. Vanderbilt.

Newport—Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont gave a dinner tonight at Marble House in honor of Miss Eleonora Sears.

Boston—Miss Eleonora Sears left here today for New York. She was returning to her place at the South Station by Harold S. Vanderbilt.

And every now and then an item bobs up from Newport or Manchester or Boston to the effect:

Miss Eleanora Sears denied so cleverly today that she is engaged to Mr. Harold S. Vanderbilt. She said there is not a word of truth in it."

Whereupon Miss Sears's girl friends read each other dire murmurs: "Oh, you Eleo!" that being their pet name for their pet friend.

Whatever rights women may or may not have, they have this one that are legitimate.

One is to change their minds early and often.

The other is not to admit that they are engaged until they are good and ready.

Miss Eleonora Sears does not change her mind often. She makes it up quickly and it stays made up.

Everybody Believes It!

But that is no reason why she should have her engagement announced until she sees fit.

Some one may say: "Why this is as much as declaring that the two are engaged."

Bless your heart, that's just what most everybody believes. They are simply waiting for the formal announcement. They are waiting in Newport. They are waiting in the North Shore resorts. They are waiting in New York and Philadelphia and in other social centres. And they are waiting particularly in Boston, where the name of Miss Eleonora Sears is always mentioned with deep respect and admiration.

Ask any Bostonian you meet: "Who is the prettiest society girl of your fair city?" She will reply, after some out of ten: "Why, Miss Eleonora Sears."

She is very dear to Boston society, with her attractive personality, her independent mind, her very many accomplishments and her healthy, natural enjoyment of life.

That Cigarette Yarn.

About a year ago last month Miss Sears stood on the sands of George Lee's private bathing beach at Beverly Farms. She had come out of the water only to be met by a reporter and to be asked about cigarette smoking. She was told that Lucy Page Gaston had said that she and Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth should be set as example to girls by not smoking cigarettes.

Miss Sears's eyes sparkled. She said: "I don't smoke cigarettes. I'm not that kind of a girl. I never smoked a cigarette in my life."

Then her natural wrath had subsided a bit, Miss Sears added:

"I am not a freak. I am just a girl, like every other girl, just a healthy, normal young woman."

And in the same token, this "healthy normal young woman," isn't announcing her engagement. She will say: "I'm not just like any other girl would do."

The fact decides which Miss Sears has made concerning this engagement(?) may drive some to concluding that there is really no engagement at all, not even an "understanding."

It's According to Hoyle.

But it is perfectly according to Hoyle to say you are not engaged, even if you are, providing that you don't wish to announce it just yet. Witness the case of Lord Camore and Miss Mildred Sherman. They were reported betrothed. The Sherman denied it. Camore denied it. And, within a week, the formal announcement was made and society expressed its pleasure at being informed of something which it already knew.

Hence formality, enraged, by the way, will be one of the few things that Miss Sears has not already done, in a promising business she is the despair of most girls and of some men.

She does so many things and does them so supremely well.

She is supremely athletic. She excels in feats of skill. She is quoted as saying recently: "Most of the men in our set are sissies."

She referred to character as well as to physical achievement. Harold S. Vanderbilt has not been of the conspicuously athletic type, though he rides, motors and handles a golf stick skillfully, but he is inclined to be studious. Nevertheless, he is a youth of determination and strong personality. If he were not he would not be acceptable to Miss Sears as a companion.

Like all the society girls of any athletic pretense whatever, Miss Sears is an expert motor car driver. She drives with ease and daring. She is mistress of the intricacies of horse-shoe riding and driving and has carried off many a blue ribbon for mounts she has ridden and rigs she has driven on the big turf.

Wonderful Swimmer, Too.

She is dexterous on the tennis court, playing a smashing game that many men opponents find more worthy of their mettle.

She is a wonderful swimmer. She was the first feminine swimmer to make the distance from Bailey's beach to Easton's beach, Newport. She did the more than four miles in three and one-half hours. She "golfs" like she plays tennis, a hard game.

She handles a motor car like a boy handles a sled. Busy Washington street paused one day to watch a young woman guide a powerful racer-built car in and out through the heavy traffic. She sat at the steering wheel as though she were in a rocking chair. The feminine driver was Miss Sears and the car a sixty horse power machine was a baby in her hands.

Aviation has no terrors for this society girl. She is a venturous lass and when Claude Grahame-White, the Englishman who was "Glorious Fourth" aviator, was in Boston Miss Sears left here today because she was "crazy to fly."

But, for all these hardy accomplishments, Miss Eleonora Sears, is fond of normal society pleasures. She is dances well. She derives deep pleasure from music, from art, from books.

She is, as she says, "as much of a girl as any other girl."

She is not going to say she is engaged until she is ready to say so, like any other girl.

DUNN CHIEF MARSHAL FOR COLUMBUS DAY

Ninth Regiment Officer Has Not Yet Announced His Staff for Parade.

Lieutenant Colonel John H. Dunn of the Ninth regiment, M. V. M., has been unanimously chosen as the chief marshal of the parade to be held on Columbus Day, Thursday, October 12.

Colonel Dunn has not yet decided upon the members of his staff.

This will be the second Columbus Day parade. The demonstration of last year was under the leadership of Colonel Sullivan, commander of the Ninth. It was an enormous parade and took hours to pass a given point. This year's procession will exceed that of 1910 in many of its features. To inspire the leaders of societies with a spirit of emulation, the executive committee has voted to offer several valuable prizes for those bodies who turn out in largest number, who make the best appearance in line and who are the designers of the most artistic floats. The prizes will be awarded by carefully selected judges who are to view the parade from various points along the route.

Legal Holiday in Some States.

All the New England States, except New Hampshire, now observe Columbus Day as a legal holiday, and most of the States of the Union have added the day to their list of public festivals.

State Deputy William J. O'Brien of the Knights of Columbus is at the head of the Boston celebration committee. In a week or two, when the vacation season is over, Mr. O'Brien will call his committee members together in frequent meetings to discuss plans and for the apportionment of preliminary details among sub-committees.

Besides the Knights of Columbus, the Catholic Order of Foresters, the Ancient Order of Hibernians and the Society of the Holy Name, a prominent part in the celebration will again fall to the Italian societies of Boston, who last year lent a picturesque air to the demonstration by their varied uniforms and banners and the handsome floats which were included in their section of the line.

Archbishop Is Expected.

Archbishop O'Connell is expected home from Europe in time for the celebration, in the success of which he takes the deepest interest.

A Columbus Day souvenir medal will be struck in honor of the day and will be worn by the marchers in the parade, as also by the vast multitude of spectators. It was estimated that last year's procession was witnessed by more than a quarter of a million people, who came into Boston for the day from all parts of the metropolitan district and outside cities and towns.

Colonel Sullivan of the Ninth Regiment will head the military division in the parade, which will include detachments of United States regulars from the harbor forts and any ships of the navy that may be ordered to Boston for the celebration of the Great Voyager's anniversary.

Requiem Mass To-day.

A solemn requiem mass will be celebrated this morning at the Church of St. Leonard of Port Maurice, Prince street, for the members of the Italian Society of St. Vincent Ferrer. Following the mass a reception will be held at the rooms of the association in Hanover street. The celebration will close with a procession.

Foresters' Whist Party.

The first social event of the recently organized Mt Ida Court, M. C. O. F., of the Meeting House Hill district, will be a whist and dancing party in Navillus Hall early in October. The committee in charge are James E. McEleney, H. C. R.; John H. Cody, C. J. Supple and Philip McAnaney.

Older Children Are Taught Rudiments of Sewing, Mending and General Housework.

Among the important Catholic institutions of Greater Boston is the German Catholic Home on Ellis street, Roxbury.

The home was established some twenty years ago by the late Father Nopper, pastor of Holy Trinity German Church, Shawmut avenue. It is under the direction of the sisters of St. Francis, whose mother house is at Glen Riddle, Pa.

Five class rooms are used for the education of the children of the home as well as providing a parochial school for the German children of the district. The entire upper floor of the building is devoted to the chapel. Here mass is celebrated every morning by one of the Jesuit fathers from the Church of the Holy Trinity. The sermons are in German as well as the reading of the gospel.

It is one of the most admirable institutions of its kind in the diocese and has supplied an agency of inestimable value in the work of sheltering the destitute and the helpless.

Is Delightfully Situated.

The home is delightfully located in one of the secluded sections of Roxbury. It owns a beautiful garden, where old fashioned flowers, rippling fountains and the laughter of children are delightful to [illegible]. Tall trees, twining vines and fragrant petunias cluster about the Summer houses and grottoes in natural profusion. In the centre is a grotto with an altar containing a statue of Mater Dolorosa. A stone cross surmounts the rock.

Through the day the little orphan children scamper and play in this garden; swings, playhouses, toys and jump rope, tag, hide-and-go-seek, make up the daily program.

The older children are taught the rudiments of housekeeping, mending and plain sewing. The principal aim of the sisters is to instill religion into the mind of the child and promote the development of character. German is spoken largely in the school rooms. When the children attain the age of fourteen they are placed in permanent private homes. Positions are secured for the boys among the various business houses of Boston.

Has Homelike Air.

A homelike air pervades the home, instilling into the minds of the children a feeling of security which they carry out into the world.

The neat dormitories assigned to the older inmates are restful and inviting. Beside the immaculate white cot stands the work basket and knitting outfit, for which the German women are noted even in old age. Two of the inmates, though blind, knit industriously through the day or tell their beads, despite their ninety years.

The lives of these good old people are made particularly comfortable because of association with German speaking companions, many of whom are unable to converse in any other tongue. Altogether, in all its excellent features this home is a place of which the German Catholics of Boston may well be proud.

Loyal Spirit of German Catholics.

The German Catholic parish of Boston is one of the oldest in the city. Besides the substantial church on Shawmut avenue the parish owns a large parish school [illegible] Catholic Casino founded in 1868, is a centre of the social life of the organization. There are also confraternities and sodalities associated with the parish. The Massachusetts Catholic Order of Foresters includes one court composed exclusively of German Catholics.

Among the German priests who have filled the rectorship of Holy Trinity Church since its organization the more prominent were Rev. Franz S. Hoffman, Rev. Franz Roloff, Rev. Alexander Martin, Rev. Gustav Eck, S. J., Rev. Ernest Reiter, S. J., Rev. Jakob Simeon, S. J., Rev. F. X. Nopper, S. J., Rev. Nicholaus Greisch, S. J., Rev. Karl Von Gudenus, S. J.; Rev. Johann Jutz, S. J.; Rev. Edmund M. Sturm, S. J., Rev. Joseph Faber, S. J.

HOLY NAME SOCIETY GOES TO BALTIMORE

Great Meeting During the Cardinal Gibbons Jubilee in October

The greatest gathering of the Holy Name Society ever held in America will take place in Baltimore on October 16 and 17. It will be the national congress of the world spread society and will be attended by members from all parts of the United States, especially New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago.

The idea of holding the congress this year in Baltimore is exceedingly interesting, this being the jubilee year of His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons, archbishop of Baltimore.

The suggestion for the Congress of Baltimore was made in the following letter sent out by the bishop-auxiliary of Baltimore:

Reverend Dear Fathers:

I hereby extend on the part of the Holy Name Society of Baltimore an invitation through you to all the Holy Name societies of the United States to hold the national convention or conference in Baltimore in October. The solemn mass at the Cathedral will be October 15, at which we expect the attendance of most of the archbishops and bishops of the United States, and I would suggest Monday, October 16, and the 17th as suitable days for the purpose. The presence of so many of our prelates will make these dates most opportune. In the hope that our invitation may be ng readily, I remain,

Very sincerely,

O. B. CORRIGAN

This letter of invitation was acted upon favorably by the branches of the society in each diocese, and a large gathering is expected in Baltimore. Boston's [illegible] [illegible] Holy Name Society of [illegible] [illegible] one of the most important factors in the congress.

ST. PETER'S SCHOOL TO OPEN ON SEPT. 13

New Commercial Course Attracts More Pupils Than Building Can Accommodate.

The second term of St. Peter's parochial [illegible] Meeting House Hill, will open on Wednesday, September 13. It was established last September under the direction of the pastor, the Rev. Peter Ronan, and has already demonstrated its worth, several of the pupils now being employed by business houses in the city. The regular course covers a term of two years and embraces bookkeeping, stenography, typewriting, commercial arithmetic, spelling and letter writing.

The prescribed course of study is equal to that employed in the best commercial colleges of the city and is obtainable entirely free of charge.

St. Peter's commercial high school has placed within the reach of all, a practical education of the most excellent order, under the tuition of efficient instructors. When a girl graduates she is qualified to enter the business world and take a position of responsibility and trust. Hitherto this branch of education has been entirely prohibitive to children whose parents were unable to meet the necessary expenditure of tuition, carfares and luncheon money.

The school is located in the building formerly occupied as the convent. During the Summer extensive preparations have been made in order to accommodate a larger number of pupils. Nearly one thousand applications have been made to the pastor by children of all denominations. Provisions have been made for a large number but the accommodations are entirely inadequate.

There is but one other parochial commercial high school in the diocese. It is [illegible]

All three are as much a part of the [illegible] as are the water and sewer systems or the public schools [illegible] persons in the City of Boston. [illegible] plays of the city. The income and outgo of [illegible] of the [illegible] is of the most up to date kind.

Great Shipbuilding Plant.

This vast industrial institution is really the backbone of Belfast [illegible]. More than 10,000 men, a large proportion of them skilled mechanics, are employed in these works, where any day in the year one [illegible] a great [illegible] in process of [illegible]. All of the White Star Line are [illegible] Queen's Island works.

When I saw it [illegible] in June the mighty White Star steamer Olympic [illegible] and lay alongside [illegible] where she was [illegible] with an army of painters and decorators on board giving the floating palace [illegible]. Another steamer of similar class, to be called the Titanic, was inside on the stocks, and will be ready for launching in the near future.

At the head of this vast concern—so [illegible] that the building of an Olympic or Titanic is [illegible] years—is the Rt. Hon. Lord Pirrie. [illegible] to him in command of this industrial army is Sir Alexander Craig. Both men deal with projects and problems every day in the year which are big enough to [illegible]. Yet outside their tremendous business cares they give public service of the most unselfish nature alike to the city of Belfast and to the country at large.

Furthermore, the cause of self government for Ireland has no more valued allies than Lord Pirrie and Sir Alexander Craig. In the new Irish Parliament they may both be leaders. Certainly, one will be. Indeed, it would not be surprising if Lord Pirrie were asked to take office as Minister of Commerce or Minister of Finance of the first cabinet of Ireland. [illegible] has already done enormous service to the cause of Ireland by placing [illegible] at the head of the Liberal Protestants of Ulster and effectually combatting the so-called Orange contention that Home Rule would be Rome Rule.

Belfast now has a population of 400,000. Of these 100,000 are Catholics.

Tory-Orange Cry of "Two Irelands."

The Tory leaders in their fight against Home Rule continually din into the public ear the assertion that there are two Irelands—the National Ireland and the Anti-National Ireland. They also claim that the province of Ulster of which Belfast is the [illegible] is [illegible] Anti-National [illegible].

Nothing [illegible] be farther from the truth. Mr. [illegible] deadly hopes in this [illegible] election more than a [illegible] Charles [illegible] Sexton [illegible] Morley, John Redmond and Joseph Devlin [illegible] Prime Minister Asquith [illegible]

[illegible] secret that a son could vote against his father or one brother against another [illegible] no human being know [illegible]. What is free and perfectly secure [illegible]. What has Ulster done? In the last twenty years she has regularly returned a majority of her members for Home Rule. Ulster is entitled to thirty-three parliamentary seats. Eighteen of these seats are held by men both Protestant and Catholic, who champion Home Rule.

And now comes the explosion of another Tory-Orange argument, that of "Prosperous Belfast." That Belfast is prosperous and a rapidly growing, imposing city no impartial traveler can deny for a moment. To do so would be to admit blindness to evidences of growth and prosperity that are to be seen in the retail business districts and in the handsome suburbs. But, most assuredly there are two Belfasts. The one is a model of commercial thrift and prosperity; the other is a frightful example of social and industrial slavery.

Linen Workers' Fearful Lot.

The condition of the tens of thousands of "home workers" in Belfast is veritably a blot upon civilization. The "sweating" practices which notoriously exist in the linen and other allied trades in Belfast and its immediate neighborhood have already become the subject of parliamentary inquiry. The men who are responsible for Belfast's unenviable fame as "the worst sweated city in Europe" are, to a man, against Home Rule. It would simply ruin business they cry, to have home rule in Ireland. Read Dr. Bailie's [illegible] the kind of "business" home rule would ruin. Dr. Bailie is a Protestant and in politics a Conservative. He is medical superintendent of the Belfast Board of Health. In his annual report for 1910 he said:

The prevalent low rate of pay given for "Home Work" necessitates prolonged and arduous labor often far into the night to afford the purchase of the barest necessities. In the last week of December a woman was observed embroidering small dots on cushion covers. There were 300 dots on each cushion. And for sewing these by hand she received the sum of one penny (two cents). She said that for a day's work of this sort she would have difficulty in making sixpence (twelve cents). Quite recently one of our inspectors was shown handkerchiefs which were to be ornamented by a design in dots; these dots were counted and it was found that the worker had to sew 384 dots for one penny (two cents). Other kinds of work are as badly paid. The finishing of shirts, which consists of making the buttonholes, sewing on buttons and making small gussets at the wrists and sides of the shirts may be instanced. In each shirt six or seven [illegible] have to be cut and hand-sewn, eight buttons have to be sewed on and four gussets made.

Twelve Cents Per Dozen For Shirts.

This work is paid at the rate of sixpence (twelve cents) for one dozen shirts. Nor is this a cheap class of goods, permitting "scamped" work. The sewing has to be neat and well finished and the buttonholes evenly sewn, the shirts being of a fine quality, for which the buying public has to give a good price. Among various kinds of badly paid work may be mentioned:

	Per dozen.
Children's pinafores, flounced and braided, at	9 cents
Women's chemises, at	15 cents
Women's aprons, at	5 cents
Men's drawers, at	20 cents
Men's shirts, at	20 cents
Blouses, at	18 cents
Ladies' overalls, at	18 cents

From these very low rates of pay must be deducted the time spent in visiting the warehouse for work, the [illegible] of the workers' sewing machine, and the price of the thread used in sewing, which is almost invariably provided by the worker. After these deductions are made the amount left to the workers is so extremely small as to make one wonder if they are benefited by the work at all. Much the same [illegible] of pay is found among the [illegible] various processes of the shoe trade, these workers constituting the larger proportion of our workers in Belfast. One penny (2 cents) per [illegible] is the ordinary rate [illegible] instances it falls below this.

It cannot be too frequently or strenuously insisted that such underpaid labor must inevitably cripple, and in great part nullify, the good effects of any schemes of health reform. The underfed [illegible] physique of the sweated worker with its weakened [illegible] of resistance to [illegible] disease, is undoubtedly one of the [illegible] causes of a high death rate. [illegible] obvious fact, too, that all sweated work is ultimately paid [illegible] the State when the [illegible] incapacitated worker [illegible] inevitable place in [illegible] hospital, or charitable [illegible] arrangement whereby [illegible] of the worker would be [illegible] and firm basis should [illegible] welcomed by all seeking [illegible] administration, as well as the improvement of the health of the people. The fact should not be lost sight of that the sweating evil injures more than those immediately concerned. Practically the whole of these underpaid workers are mothers and the evil effects of their unremitting and ill-remunerated toil must be transmitted to the next generation. It is not possible to estimate the amount of consumption prevailing that is due to sweating, but in it we certainly have a contributory cause.

Belfast Has its Dr. Wiley.

As might be expected the honest and humane Dr. Bailie got himself into a morass of trouble through this report. The "interests," which in Belfast absolutely control everything, got after Dr. Bailie, horse, foot and dragoons and the third degree he has been subjected to in secret [illegible] meetings at the City Hall were almost as bad as the sweating atrocities he exposed in his report. Dr. Bailie will yet pay the full penalty of his honesty. The "interests" will keep after him until his head rolls into the basket. No man capable of writing such an indictment as [illegible] hold public office in prosperous and loyal Belfast.

The Belfast Trades and Labor Council took up the evidence of Dr. Bailie and if his report should cost the doctor his official head, the world will know of the execution. Publicity is making dangerous work nowadays of the political killing of fearless and honorable servants of the people.

Protest Meeting in Ulster Hall.

At a mass meeting held in the Ulster Hall "to protest against the sweating practices prevalent in the linen and cognate trades in Belfast and district," Mr. D. R. Campbell, president of the Trades Council, was in the chair. With him on the platform were Joseph Devlin, M. P., William Walker, J. P.; George Greig, J. Longmore, Thomas Frost, Archibald Savage, Thomas Johnston, John Mercier, John Whitla, Samuel Officer, James Weir, James Freeland, Jacob Culbert and Thomas Anderson.

All these Belfast labor leaders are Protestants in religion. But they have had their eyes opened to the fact that though Belfast has four members of Parliament, but one (Joseph Devlin) is on the side of the people. It is such as they who helped Devlin win his seat for Belfast at the last two or three general elections. One of these days they will go farther. They will be strong enough to break down all barriers of wretched sectarian hate and elect Devlin, who is a veritable idol of the masses in Belfast, to the chief magistrate's chair of his native city.

At that meeting in Ulster Hall William Walker moved the following resolution.

"That this meeting of the citizens of Belfast endorses the demand to be made on the Secretary of State, by the Belfast Trades and Labor Council, for an inquiry into the condition of the workers in the linen and cognate trades, expresses its horror of the conditions under which many of the workers are employed, calls upon the corporation to take drastic action in regard to the unsanitary conditions under which some of the "Home work" is done, as disclosed in Dr. Bailie's report, and appeals to the workers themselves to assist, by their direct evidence at the inquiry, in the abolition of a condition of affairs discreditable to Belfast, a blot upon civilization and a menace to the health of the community."

Speaking of his resolution, Mr. Walker said:

"A little over three years ago I stood on this platform for the purpose of discussing a similar question to that with which we are now dealing. At that time the workers in the mills were on strike, demanding an increase in their wages. Some of them succeeded in getting it, for public opinion was on their side. But, after granting the increase the linen merchants saw another way in which they could accomplish their aim. They put the mills on short time and then they resorted to a "speeding up" process such as was never heard of or seen in the history of the mills and factories of Belfast.

The class we are appealing for to-night is made up of poor women who are trying to answer the cry of their children for bread. We want to see if the public conscience of Belfast cannot be aroused, even at the eleventh hour, to move the machinery of the State so that these women might be saved from a living grave and a worse hell. There are three things, continued Mr. Walker, which indicate what we describe as "sweating."

One is underpayment, another is too long hours, and the third is working under unsanitary conditions, which are a menace to the [illegible] health. Any one of these conditions would justify the charge of sweating, but when they have an accumulation of all three horrors, the charge of sweating was not merely a charge of which Belfast should be ashamed, but one which, if the city had any Christianity within its borders, it would no longer tolerate. If we had less praying and more paying it would be better for all. Only the other day the Archbishop of Canterbury headed a deputation to the Prime Minister for the purpose of protesting against the horrors in the Congo. Would some gentleman kindly send the Archbishop a statement of the horrors which are permitted in Belfast?

Week's Wage 87 Cents.

The speaker proceeded to give instances of alleged sweating which had come under his own observation, and mentioned a case in which a skilled dressmaker, who applied for a situation in one of the "aristocratic" shops in the city was offered 3s. 6d. (87 cents) a week. In another case which recently came before the Recorder of Belfast it transpired that a young man, twenty-two years of age, was receiving a wage of 4s. 6d. ($1.12) per week.

In Christian Belfast, said Mr. Walker, many mothers are obliged to work up to the very hour of their confinement. And there are very many women in Belfast who are trying to keep body and soul together on a wage of three shillings and six pence (87 cents) a week.

Miss Galway, who spoke after Mr. Walker, said that for sixteen years she had been trying to bring before the public the evils of sweating as it exists in Belfast. She said, in the course of an earnest address:

"I only wish we had more Dr. Bailies. In company with other ladies I have gone into the homes of those workers. I have seen the pay books and the facts we have collected can not be contradicted. We could give names and addresses, only that the workers names must be kept secret, because half a loaf is better than no bread, and if any of the workers who gave us our information were known they would be dismissed by some of their Christian employers (cries of shame).

Miss Galway then gave the following figures or schedule of pay:

For clipping cotton pocket handkerchiefs, with 120 clips on each, a sum of 1d. (2 cents) per dozen was paid, and it took an expert worker two hours to clip twelve dozen.

For thread-drawing pure linen handkerchiefs supplied by one of the best and oldest firms in the city 1d. (2 cents) per dozen was paid, and six dozen could be drawn in one hard day's work.

A widow with seven children could earn at the most 4s. (96 cents) per week at hand work, the rate of payment being 1s. 3d. (54 cents) per dozen handkerchiefs.

For clipping the threads on an elaborately embroidered bedspread, 85in. by 100in., ¾d (less than 2 cents) was paid, and it took fully an hour to do that work.

Another woman was engaged three long days embroidering a linen tea-cloth, 45in. by 45in., for which she was paid 8d. (16 cents).

Thread-drawing of pillow cases was paid at the rate of 4d. (8 cents) per dozen, and four could be done in an hour.

On a cotton handkerchief there were 112 dots and the worker was paid 6d. (12 cents) per dozen handkerchiefs, while at shirtmaking an expert worker could earn about 1s. 3d. (54 cents) in fourteen hours.

After Mr. Walker and Miss Galway had spoken, the meeting called loudly for Mr. Devlin, M. P., who, as he rose to speak was greeted with cheering from all parts of the hall. In the course of a stirring speech the member for West Belfast said:

Devlin Will Force An Inquiry.

I have come here to support this cause from a sense of public duty. No man could listen to the pathetic story just recited by Miss Galway and not feel that the prevalance of such conditions are an outrage on our common humanity. When the House of Commons meets again I will demand a public inquiry and I will ask that the venue shall be shifted from behind the closed doors of Belfast city hall to the open arena of the Imperial parliament. (Applause.) I will do so not only because of the story which Miss Galway has told and because of the report of Dr. Bailie, but in the interests of this city of which we are all proud in order that there might be lifted from it the stigma which now rests upon it of carrying on a system of chattel slavery.

We boast in America and in Australia and Canada that Belfast produces the finest linen in the world with every adornment that skill and artistic taste could produce and we are all proud of our linen industry. But what would our merchants think if on American platforms Miss Galway took those manufactured articles and showed them to the people of America who buy our Irish linen and pay a 60 per cent. tariff on it. What would they think out in America if they were told that all this artistic work was done by the nimble fingers of crushed and sweated women? that their bodies and souls were auctioned and bargained in the market and that they died at thirty-nine years of age? Such an impression created in the minds of the American people would not tend to an extension of the Irish linen trade across the seas.

A Bank Which Cannot Fail.

Another interesting industrial system which prevails in Belfast and which has just been brought to public notice is a unique mode of procedure for hiring girl help in linen warehouses. For the first three weeks they are paid $1.50 (6 shillings) per week. Out of this generous stipend is deducted an allowance for "thread" and two shillings (fifty cents) a week for "bank." After three weeks the girls are supposed to have attained some degree of proficiency and they are placed on piece work with stoppages out their pay for "bank," until the amount lodged in the "bank" reaches one pound, five dollars. Every girl has to sign an agreement before she enters the employment that should she leave within two years the amount lodged in "bank" is forfeited.

In a recent debate in the House of Commons, a gentleman in the Tory benches interrupted a speech of the Prime Minister with the remark:

You need not worry about Home Rule; that trouble will be settled by Belfast. Belfast will take care of Home Rule.

It is a question which to admire the most in the public utterances of those doughty "livers of the ditches" who want the world to believe that all Ireland must stand still because this one town of Belfast is the centre of bitter sectarianism and irreconcilable Tory-Orange sentiment. Before Belfast sets out to "take care" of home rule or of anything else it would seem to be the part of prudence for her sage and humanitarian leaders to remove from their city the stigma of being the abiding place of so many thousands of "sweated" workers in whose behalf Dr. Baylie penned his honest and sympathetic report.

Mayor's Daughter Writes Vivid Narrative of Her Travels with Chamber of Commerce Party; How She Visited Palaces and Mediaeval Prisons with Terrible Torture Chambers, Along Scenic Rhine

HOW would it do to have a string of covered wagons down at Nantasket Beach to take bathers to and from the water, so they would be under cover all the way.

That's the way they do at Ostend, the fashionable Continental watering place. Rose Fitzgerald, eldest daughter of the Mayor, who has just returned from a trip abroad with her father, her sister and the Boston Chamber of Commerce party, thought it quite amusing.

What wouldn't most Boston girls give for a sail up the famous Rhine? Miss Fitzgerald made that trip.

How about dancing rapidly, being whirled around and around with never a reverse. Miss Fitzgerald found it quite a dizzy experience at first when she attended a dance at Dresden.

And could anything be more delightful than a dreamy waltz by the beautiful Danube, to the music of the "Blue Danube" itself and with a gallant young Austrian gentleman for a partner?

These are just samples of the things described by Miss Fitzgerald in a narrative she has written for the Sunday AMERICAN. It is based upon the diary she kept abroad.

People, palaces, pictures, poverty, vineyards and instruments of torture, the Hamburg Zoo and Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock dog, ice carnivals and a hair-dressing contest—all these and much more are related in as clever and entertaining a story of travel as one could wish to read.

Here is Miss Rose Fitzgerald's story, as written by herself:

By ROSE FITZGERALD.

We left Boston on the 27th of June, on the Franconia, father, Agnes and myself. We had a most delightful trip over and landed at Fishguard, and proceeded to London. Here we spent a splendid afternoon and evening.

The next day we went to the country seat of Sir Thomas Lipton, about an hour's ride from London. It is a most beautiful place. The house, set well into the grounds, is of American architecture, spacious and comfortable. The gardens round about are wonderful. There is an abundance of orchids and luxuriant flowers blooming in dazzling brightness. The lawns stretch far and near.

Sir Thomas is an admirable host. He entertained us royally. One of the most interesting, and at the same time amusing things we saw was his dog, "Shamrock," presented to him by a dear friend. On the lower back of the dog there is a large-sized shamrock, perfectly distinct, the tail forming the stem of the petal. The dog is of light brown, while the shamrock is of a darker shade of hair. It is one of Sir Thomas's proudest possessions.

Father held "Shamrock" while I took his picture. It is very funny. Luncheon was served on the grounds, by natives of Ceylon whom Sir Thomas has brought from that country. They are very deft servants, neat and orderly at all times. Their spotless white uniforms make a picturesque feature to the beautiful estate.

In the afternoon we started for Ostend, a fashionable watering place, but it was rather early in the season and there were few about. There is one awfully funny feature about the place. The bath houses are built upon tracks and pulled well up on the beach. When you have donned your bathing suit, and are ready to go into the water, you signal an attendant, who hitches a horse to your house and away you go down to the water.

When you are ready to go out you simply signal the attendant, go into the house and you are towed back again. One of the party remarked that he would not care to give displeasure to the attendant as it would be a great joke if he should refuse to tow one back. It wouldn't do to have a grudge exist.

The same day we went to the Kursaal Symphony concert in the evening, which was followed by dancing. It was an excellent program. The music all through Europe is exceptionally fine.

Met Party at Brussels.

From here we went to Brussels, where we were presented to the Chamber of Commerce party. We had a five-pound box of candy, which father presented to the ladies. It caused no end of fun, because they said "it seemed really good to see an old familiar box cover in that foreign land. It almost looked like an old friend." We stayed in Brussels over night.

I have been to Brussels many times, while I was at school. It is a beautiful place and was greatly admired by all members of the party. Most of the ladies did a little shopping during the morning. The shops are full of the most beautiful things. The next day we went to Dusseldorf and left the party there. My sister and I went directly to Aix la Chapelle to visit our old convent.

This city is especially interesting because of the many treaties which were signed within its confines. Here, too, is the beautiful old Cathedral of Charlemagne. It is a magnificent structure. The whole city is full of relics and reminiscences of mediaeval history. In the cathedral there are many relics brought from the Holy Land by Charlemagne during his conquests. The cathedral and Rathhaus are over 1,000 years old.

Visit to Convent.

We rode out to the convent in a car, a distance of about three miles. To our great delight, we found a great many of the old mistresses (nuns) were there. We also found some of our former schoolmates whom we were delighted to meet again. The majority of the girls are French and German, but there are two or three American girls.

One of the most striking things about these girls is their inherent politeness and bearing. The majority of them are baronesses or countesses and they are the acme of gentleness and culture, which has been developed in them by generations and generations of royal ancestors.

They are submissive and well trained. When they are requested to do certain things they obey with alacrity and promptness. In fact, they rarely ever take the initiative in anything, submitting always to the dictation of their parents and superiors, upon whom they rely with implicit trust and confidence.

Although there are so many royal young personages within the convent, their station is distinguishable only by the markings on their linen and napkin rings, bearing the royal coat of arms or family crest, as we all wore the regulation black uniforms. The distinction of their ranks is easily discerned from the number of prongs on the royal crown, or the family crest, designating the house of a count, a baron or a freiherr.

Wonder at American Girls.

The girls cannot understand the independent income of the American students. It is a source of wonder to them when an American girl goes over to the town and purchases just what she wants without having to consult with her elders, as to a choice or the means of obtaining it. They have a small amount of pocket money, and their expenditures consist of pencils, paper, etc. Their parents or mistresses attend to their wardrobes and necessary outlays.

They are extremely ambitious to learn and are earnest students. Indeed, if you did not watch out, you would be talking English to them most of the time, instead of cultivating a fluency of the German language. They love to get the American girls to talk in English.

My sister and I did a little brushing up on our German and French while there this time, and found much to our delight, that we had not receded far, and easily adapted ourselves to the language.

We attribute much of this to our association with members of the German Club of Boston, among whom it is spoken exclusively. The lectures throughout the winter are always in German, as well as the vocal numbers on the concert programs.

Firm in Friendship.

The German girls are firm in their friendships, although at first reticent to form attachments, until they have apparently made up their minds just how they will proceed. The the conclusion determines their stand for all time. They are your friends afterwards in everything.

The convent is located in Holland, just over the German borderline because since the time of Bismarck, no German-teaching nun has been allowed within the German confines; just as the French sisters, since the disruption in France, have established their convents in Italy and country round about.

It seems so queer to go shopping in Aix-la-Chapelle, just over the line, and then be obliged to pay duty on your purchases. The custom officer is always there and you are obliged to open up your bundles. It seems a joke, too, when your purchases happen to be cakes, because if they are a bit weighty they are especially dutiful.

We stayed three days at the convent, and they were most happy ones. I love it dearly and the mistresses and girls.

Many Interesting Relics.

In the cathedral of Aix-la-Chapelle there are many relics, including alleged pieces of the true cross, the cloth which wrapped the head of John the Baptist, which is exposed every seven years from the top of the cathedral, and around the four corners. Each day a different bishop has charge of the ceremonies. We were most fortunate to have been there during the last exposition which was the seventh year and the year before we left the convent. The people travel from miles and miles to see it and the square is filled with pilgrims.

There is also in the cathedral the dress reputed to have been worn by the Virgin Mother during her journey to Bethlehem and some of the swaddling clothes of the Christ child. All about are wax forms of fingers, arms, heads and limbs, containing the alleged bones of various saints and martyrs. It is a very interesting collection.

We left on Monday morning at 6 o'clock and met father at Cologne, where we joined the party. We all visited the cathedral, which is the crowning glory of the city. Then, too, the zoological gardens are most excellent.

Of course, the cologne industry formed a very interesting feature, but the cathedral is wonderful. It is made of stone. In the rear of the chapel there are relics of the "Three Wise Men" who followed the star to Bethlehem. There are many other relics from the Holy Land.

Tour Up the Rhine.

From here we went to Coblentz and took a boat for a trip up the Rhine. There were several German students on board who sang native songs for our benefit and which we enjoyed immensely. The trip was most wonderful and awesome. On one bank you would see the ruins of an old castle with tragic legends, or the high parapet from which a maiden leaped to her tragic death when locked from the company of her lover. You just thrilled with excitement as the scenes were recalled. We saw the rock of the Lorelei made immortal by the Heine poem. The tower watch of the Rhine was most picturesque.

I took several pictures along the banks, which are beautifully terraced, and amid the gleaming foliage the turrets and towers of old castles stretch skyward in romantic beauty.

About the most wonderful things are the vineyards. They present the highest art in perfection in cultivation. The vines are systematically laid out and tumble over the walls and parapets along the banks.

The yield is enormous, and several hundred workers are employed at the ripening season. They extend for many miles along the banks and are protected from the heavy rains and winds by walls of masonry. Otherwise they would be swept into the river, and in time washed completely away.

At Bingen on the Rhine.

The trip was just long enough to include the prettiest part of the river. We alighted at Bingen, where we were met by a special train, which had followed our course up the river arriving at precisely the same time as the party. From here we went to Frankfort, arriving at 7 o'clock in the evening.

Here a dinner was given at the Rathhaus (City Hall) to the visiting party by the city. In this hall the Emperors are crowned. It was the first time it had been used for a dinner party for a great many years, and was evidence of the greatest courtesy they could bestow on us. It is a magnificent hall, with pictures of royalty all about. The Mayor gave an address in beautiful English. In fact, all of the officers speak English fluently.

The next morning we drove about the city and saw a great many things of interest. We visited the chemical works and saw some wonderful processes there. They took beautiful roses, and by infusion of liquid air, froze the flowers in their natural beauty. Some of the men said about the same methods prevailed in the chemical factories in America.

Then we did have a delightful experience. We ascended in a balloon and took a birdseye view of the city.

Saw Goethe's Home.

After our descent we had luncheon at the chemical works, given by the members of the organization. We took a ride through the city and saw the house of Goethe, the famous poet. We also visited the cathedral. In the city we saw a very old fountain from which wine flowed in the olden days when the emperors were crowned. It was a very quaint city, with gabled roofs of a bright red color.

We had tea at the Palmengarten. It is very beautifully laid out. There are several tennis courts, shooting ranges, an abundance of palm trees, large and small, and always the beautiful flowers.

We left for Hamburg at 9 o'clock that evening, arriving the next morning at 7 o'clock. Here we took a ride over to the docks and found much to interest us in their inspection. It was particularly interesting to the men. I enjoyed watching the great ocean liners in process of building. There were a great many of them. We lunched near the wharf.

That evening we took a trip to the Elston Basin. The men said it would be the acme of their hopes to lay out our Charles River Basin along the same lines. It surely would be beautiful. We stopped at a cafe on the Basin and had dinner. In the evening there were fire works illuminations in our honor. They are much the same as our fireworks displays. The ovation was given by the American residents. The menu consisted of German dishes, and it was good, too.

Great Hamburg Zoo

The next day we went to the Haffenbach Zoo. It was very fine indeed. The collection of animals is most wonderful, representing almost every known species. Each animal is placed in surroundings as near like his native elements as it is possible to make them. The lion walks and roars among huge rocks and boulders, while the polar bears crawl amid ice covered crags, leaping off at will, into the basin of freezing water below. It gives one a very definite idea of the various animals and their native haunts.

It is the hope of the officials to convert a large area of Franklin Park into a zoo to be built and conducted along these lines. The place is ideal for it.

We left on Saturday morning for Berlin. We rode about the city and saw the public buildings, technical high school, cathedrals and palaces. We visited the palace at Charlottenburg. The Emperor and his family were out of town at their Summer country seat. When I was in Berlin before I saw the Emperor on the tennis grounds and I saw the Empress and the Crown Princess in the opera house. It was a performance of "Tannhauser." I also saw the Crown Prince and Princess skating in the park at Potsdam, their palace. They were closely guarded by a special officer.

Visit to the Palace.

Well the next day, the party went to visit the palace. We all enjoyed it very much. That night my sister and I went to the indoor skating rink. It was an ice carnival. The skaters, men and women, came out singly and in pairs in brightly hued costumes and did the most wonderful things on skates. It was really a pantomime theatrical and reminded me of a huge pageant. All about the balconies the audience were seated at tables, where dinner, luncheons and drinks were being served. It was a very happy gathering and everybody seemed to enjoy themselves immensely.

That is one thing about Europe, everybody seems so happy and care free. Even the very poor, they do not seem as restless under the conditions and take what pleasure there is at hand and seem to enjoy it. Everybody is always merrymaking at the cafes, concert halls and gardens. That ice carnival was one of the prettiest scenes we witnessed. I noticed the air was not nearly so cold as we experienced in our Arena here in Boston during the ice skating time. In fact, it was quite warm.

Luncheon at the Bourse.

The next day we had luncheon at the Bourse (Stock Exchange). It is a good deal like our own. We were introduced to a very charming young woman, the daughter of one of the bankers. We found her acquaintance very pleasing.

Next day we went for an auto ride. We covered many miles of country and passed through beautiful groups of old woodlands. In the evening we went to the theatre. A dinner was given in the zoological gardens the next morning. The gardens, palaces, opera house and museums are wonderful and beautiful. I just love Berlin.

On Wednesday, July 19, we left here to go to Dresden. The people here were very hospitable. Every evening the dinner souvenirs were varied and beautiful. One evening it was a picture of the Sistine Madonna, which is the prize picture of Dresden, and the next evening it was a picture of "The Chocolate Maide." I often think how few people realize the wonderful painting from which this picture is taken, when they see it on pieces of advertising matter as a trade mark. It is a wonderful masterpiece.

Heard Yankee Airs.

The dinner souvenirs were enclosed in small white envelopes, stamped, ready for mailing to the folks at home. It was a most thoughtful arrangement.

We had tea at the Belvedere Cafe where the orchestra played American airs exclusively in our honor. The next day we visited the galleries. There Dr. Babcock told us the story of how the Sistine Madonna was smuggled into Dresden by being covered with a coat of paint, and many other interesting circumstances under which it had been painted. There were many famous paintings, all of which have interesting stories attached.

We had luncheon at the city hall. That evening we attended a dancing party. And they do dance so awfully fast in Europe. They twirl and whirl with never a reverse until you would think they would fall in dizziness. They seem to enjoy it immensely, but my, it is fast.

A trip up the Elbe was the program for the next day, to Shandau, a popular Summer resort in the Saxony Mountains, from which we had a beautiful view of the city. Here we were shown especial courtesy. We were met at the boat by a full brass band, the members of which all wore tall silk hats (an especial mark of honor and courtesy). We formed directly behind the band and marched through the streets and were greeted on all sides by the native women and children waving kerchiefs and banners as we passed. It reminded us very much of Switzerland. We were escorted back to the boat by the band and received the same enthusiastic ovation from the natives.

Bohemian Lunch at Prague.

The next day we started for the Prague. We stopped at the Palace Hotel and partook of a Bohemian lunch. We were particularly delighted with this, as it was a change from the customary table d'hote dinners. It was a treat to order just what we wanted. We made a trip to the city in carriages and saw the cathedral and the monastery of St. Norbert. We also saw a prayerbook of the sixth century.

There is a beautiful park here, formerly the hunting grounds of the King. Tea was served on the side of the mountain. Of course, unless one visits these tea resorts, one cannot adequately form an idea of the enjoyment experienced. There are no annoying insects flying about, the same as we have here. The skies are so clear, the flowers so luxuriant. Out in the open with beautiful music and tables scattered about, there is the low hum of pleasant conversation and quiet merrymaking.

In the evening we had dinner as guests of the city. The dinner parties at the different places we visited were especially instructive and entertaining, as there was pleasant social intercourse with the native ladies, with whom ideas and comments were exchanged, giving each a very definite idea of things [illegible] conditions most [illegible] from a [illegible] passing through the cities.

We obtained many interesting ideas and broadened [illegible] to a remarkable extent. We found it unwise, however, to express [illegible] pronounced praise of the [illegible] and found it safe to withhold our criticisms, as the native [illegible] very proud of his country and offers the best to his guest.

That evening we made up a little party of eighteen and had a little celebration, as it was the anniversary of my birthday. We had a little dance too.

Next day we went to the castle of Nuremberg. It was the most interesting castle I have ever seen. There is a well there 130 feet deep hewn out of solid rock. It took a drop of water six seconds to reach the bottom. One of the guides lowered a lighted lantern down the well. It seemed like a tiny spark. It used to connect with the City Hall and the prisoners had to get water from an underground passage, because they were never allowed to see the light of [illegible].

All about the castle were numberless instruments [illegible] gruesome feeling. There were implements for pulling out tongues and eyes, cradles the bottom of which were filled with sharp prongs and knife blades and the victim rocked to death upon them, stocks to torture unfortunates and many other awful implements. We also saw the royal apartments.

One of the interesting sights of the place are the various bred ribbons worn by the college students on their hats. They wear them on all occasions and when [illegible] with their [illegible] scars upon their faces, attained in duels. They are supposed to be tokens of [illegible] constant irritation.

Duels Marks of Honor.

They are looked upon as marks of honor, although Bismarck conquered his enemies and with wonderful skill avoided scarring his person at all. Duelling is forbidden by law, but it is indulged in extensively.

The toy shops were especially interesting to the party. They make some wonderful mechanical toys here.

We took an auto trip to Munich. On the way we passed through Rottenberg. Passing through the various towns and cities we obtained a very good idea of the people and their mode of living. I took few people realize the conditions which prevail here. The people are barefooted and ragged. They are extremely poor and the women work so hard. They are out in the fields and streets working like men. They are the hard workers of the family and seem to accept conditions uncomplainingly. One of the picturesque sights were the "goose girls" scattered about. All around them are flocks of geese. I could not describe their poverty and hardships. All through Europe the scenes reminded me of just what I have witnessed in the various theatre plays depicting native landscapes. They are really a very good representation. There are very few native costumes worn. They are of a more sombre color than originally and better adapted to the needs of the times. In Munich we saw some very fine paintings by Murillo. We were told many interesting things about them and [illegible] artist rising from the circles of the lowly people, still continued to depict them and take his subjects from the people from which he had sprung.

Saw Composer Wagner's House.

We saw Wagner's house where the music for Parsifal was written. We also saw [illegible] house.

We visited the city baths. I think there is a vast difference of the idea of bathing among the American people and the Europeans. They do not bathe as freely. Their clothes, on the whole, are of much more durable material, but not the light fluffiness of the American woman. When they are out of doors a great part of the time, they are not as strenuous followers of the fresh air living as we are.

They would not think of leaving their windows open as we do during the year, and if you are in their company at the public concert halls, cafes and restaurants you will notice them taking precautions to avoid the least draft of air and to choose spots as far away from the direct current as possible. They certainly are not so strenuous as the average American girl.

I saw a funny sight that evening on returning to the hotel. In the parlors a hair dressing contest was in progress. There were fifty hair dressers with their models. All about were arranged judges who were to award the prizes to the one making the most perfect dressing in a specified time. Time and results were the prime factors in the contest. I never saw such a variety of hair. There were blondes and brunettes, black hair, white hair, red hair, long hair, short hair and in fact, a perfect galaxy of types.

A Pantomimic Clock.

It was rather a long test, so we did not stay to see who secured the prize, but it was very interesting and amusing.

We were all very much interested in the clock which gives a performance or pantomime at 11 each day in the square. The little figures all come out and courtesy and pirouette, going through little minuets and pantomimic dances. It is quite lifelike and amusing. There was quite a large gathering in the square watching it. The figures keep graceful time to the chimes of the clock. It lasts about ten minutes when they withdraw, like finished actors.

We had dinner that day at the Ausstellung grounds and watched the dancers, always the same swift twirling.

The party left that evening for Vienna and arrived there at 7:10. We met some very [illegible] people at luncheon, which was served at the Konzertgarten. Here as well as every place we visited the ladies expressed an earnest desire to come to Boston in 1912 to attend the international congress. They were particularly pleased at the outlook and in fact we made quite definite plans for their entertainment. It will be a grand gathering of the world's finest women and we expect to renew many charming acquaintances made during our trip.

Photographed Sir Thomas Lipton's Freak Dog While Making Friends with English Aristocrecy Ice Carnivals, Balls and a Hair-Dressing Contest Which, She Witnessed, Delightfully Described

Visit to Emperor's Palace.

We went to the royal palace of Emperor Francis Joseph at Schonbrun. He is really a very good Emperor and does all in his power to keep his peoples together, for there is always more or less of an undercurrent of restlessness, the [illegible] being mostly [illegible]. He is respected by them. We noticed a great many shops selling leather novelties, both in Germany and Austria. My, but one sees an abundance of jewelry in all of the shops of Europe! You would wonder how they could possibly dispose of all of it, but while the people are possessors of some very valuable and extensive collections of jewels you do not see them lavishly adorned. I think they like a variety more than a great display at one time. The shop windows are truly ravishing.

We went to the Sachengarten to dinner and I had the honor of sitting [illegible] lady gallantly surrounded by the gentlemen of state and royalty. I remember one evening Agnes and I and one of the other ladies of our party in some inexplicable manner, found ourselves seated at one table with the usual large number of gentlemen. One of the men who was arranging the party came over and said, rather disappointedly, "What, are all the ladies going to sit at one table?" It caused quite a laugh.

The Blue Danube Waltz.

All through here the pastry cakes and ices are delicious, and they do serve so many ices and such a variety. In some places you will find this custom more prevalent than others.

One of the most genuine delights I experienced during the entire trip was the dance after dinner. Our partners were the Austrian young men still dancing without the reverse, but the music! oh, I shall never forget it. It was the beautiful Blue Danube Waltz, and couldn't they play it! It is my favorite piece. When I am asked to make a selection for any musical dancing program, I always request the Blue Danube Waltz, and then I am sure to be satisfied with the rest of the order. So to find myself dancing to its strain there upon the banks of the beautiful Blue Danube River was a joy almost beyond words. It was a supremely happy moment.

We found the Austrian gentlemen delightful partners, who spoke English with a distinct [illegible] accent. You would be surprised to hear the way [illegible] the English language is spoken in the different countries through which we passed. The construction of the sentences is entirely in accordance with the best rules of the language, but the inflections and modes of expression are as varied as one could imagine. In most [illegible] finish a sentence with a rising inflection which is most amusing.

Venice in Vienna.

That evening we went to a resort called "Venedig in Vienne," meaning "Venice in Vienna." It reminded me somewhat of Coney Island. There was great gaiety and merriment. All about there are singers, and one of our party tipped some of them and they stood about our tables, singing.

The services in St. Stephen's Cathedral were beautiful. There was a full orchestra there. In fact you will find that throughout many of the European churches. We also visited the museums here. There are many fine collections of art. We also visited the insane hospital and were surprised at the excellent conditions and the manner in which they care for the patients. It is the finest system imaginable. Their methods are most humane and systematic, and it made a marked impression upon the members of our party.

We had tea in a cafe situated upon a mountain. There is always the delightful absence of annoying insects. Flowers, music, beautiful air and a spirit of merrymaking. The little tea parties were one of our chief delights.

We had dinner that evening at the Rathhaus, which seats about 2,500. It was one of the most interesting parties we had.

We left Vienna the next morning and started for Buda Pest. We drove around the city, through the park and saw the city house of Gladys Vanderbilt, the Countess Szechenyi. I like Buda Pest very much indeed. The river divides the city. One side is called Buda and the other Pest, connected by a bridge, just as you would connect the two words with a hyphen.

That afternoon we took a trip up the Danube River. It is a magnificent sail. On its banks are situated the beautiful houses of Parliament and several other noted buildings. The cathedral is surmounted by a mosaic roof. It is quite a surprising feature and extremely novel. We saw the palace where the Emperor lives when he visits the city. It is beautifully furnished, but seldom used. The tapestries and curtains are of the richest texture. We had luncheon on St. Margaret's Isle in the Danube. That evening we had dinner on the top of a mountain. It took an hour and a half to ride up. Here the music was furnished by a gypsy band. They are not particularly a musical race and seemed to prefer the [illegible] coming back down the mountain in the twilight little lights dotted here and there through the gleaming foliage of the trees, twinkling from the windows of the houses like jewels.

We went direct from Austria to Paris, father, Agnes and I. It took thirty-six hours. We were only in Paris one day. It is [illegible] a wonderful city, and you might stay on indefinitely and still see sights and new phases. The cafes are wonderful with the vivacious, inquisitive, daintily-dressed women. They thrill with vivacity and piquancy. They are quick and responsive, always brilliant and highly concentrated. That is the general [illegible].

[illegible] we went to London. It was [illegible] We went to the theatre in the evening. It was "The Count of Luxembourg," a light opera. It was written by the author of "The Merry Widow." I think it will be the popular musical comedy here next year.

Next day we went on board Sir Thomas Lipton's yacht, and had a splendid time. He is a most charming and hospitable host. We met the Count and Countess of [illegible] and their children, one of the highest families of the Scottish nobility. They are charming, and are among the closest of Sir Thomas's friends.

Sir Thomas's yacht is a [illegible] pictures of [illegible] and a great many of the [illegible] the King and Queen of Spain [illegible] the yacht.

Lipton Still Hopes for Cup.

One of his proudest possessions is a large golden cup, presented to him by the American people. It cost many thousands of dollars and the number of people it represents may be realized when one is told that the contributors were allowed to give but 5 cents each towards its purchase.

Sir Thomas still hopes to win the cup back, being a true sportsman, but cannot see this possibility on account of the distance, which would necessitate a heavy boat to compete with the lighter American craft. However, he still hopes [illegible] he has a fine phonograph and a large collection of records of American airs. He is very much interested and impressed with the American people and admires their energy and strenuousness.

We sailed as far as Cowes that day, and after dinner on board returned to London.

We crossed the Irish Sea and arrived in Dublin, where we visited Phoenix Park, which is one of the attractions.

We went from here to Cork and had the [illegible] of [illegible].

Kissed Blarney Stone.

We also visited and kissed the Blarney Stone. [illegible] We took [illegible] was delightful. We played deck tennis and shuffleboard. After the regular series [illegible] prize. I worked pretty hard for the first prize but lost [illegible] several [illegible] dancing parties.

We had one of the most delightful trips imaginable, and [illegible] the memories have a fine collection of souvenirs which the different [illegible] presented to us, including [illegible] cards, pins and favors of all [illegible] distributions of flowers and [illegible] cities, but they are now a [illegible] memory.

Throughout the entire [illegible] and breadth of Europe the people are intensely interested in [illegible] and the American people. Of [illegible] they cannot understand the freedom with which the American girls go about and intermingle with their fellowmen and the independence with which they follow their individual whims and fancies. My diary furnishes plenty of amusement [illegible] my pleasant [illegible] like the ludicrous attempts we made at conquering the Hungarian language. There were so many pleasant little side plays.

"Glad I'm an American."

It is a common sight to see ladies of the highest rank all through Europe smoking cigarettes and drinking wines and beers. The women and children throughout Germany drink beers and light wines all the time. It is the custom. There is very little or no intoxication there.

The buildings are wonderful. Of course in America most of our buildings are put up with as little delay as possible to insure good results, while in Europe the buildings are always things of beauty, representing years of labor, and thought for the attainment of beauty and durability. Beautiful architecture is the keynote. It is to be seen everywhere. Nothing would induce them to sacrifice a feature of beauty for the sake of gaining time. Time, they claim, goes on indefinitely, but the work of erection, when finished, is finished for all time, to either enhance or detract. It is permanent and must be dealt with accordingly.

Europe is delightful, the people are charming, but I'm glad I'm an American, although travel broadens one more than anything else, and forces the conviction that we are but one spot in the great universe and the other spots are just as important, just as interesting and just as much a part of the great scheme as our waiting friends and families in dear Old Boston Town.

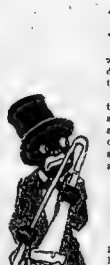
Cheer Up! Here Come the Merry "Georgia Minstrels"



BY M'INTYRE AND HEATH.

(Copyright by the Authors and Published by Their Permission. All Stage Rights Reserved.)

HEATH—Alexanduh, you hab disgraced me some mo'. In all mah trabbula Ah hab nebber seen such an all fool niggah.

M'INTYRE—What Ah do now? Gwan tell me—wat Ah do? Did Ah ovah eat mah sef when Ah eat dat can of bill postin paste? Gwan tell me. You all time telling me what Ah do—gwan tell it.

HEATH—You did this, Alexanduh. We went into dat hotel last night to sleep. You wasn't satisfied wif a single bed. No, you mus' hab lots ob room. So you speak down stairs and flop on the billiard table. Ah comes down to breakfas' dis mo'ning and dere you an, stretched out lak a canalpose. Ah goes up to de clerk an' Ah say:

"Mah bill, please."

"Fo' whom?" say de clerk.

"Fo' me an' Alexanduh, my pahtnuh."

"What room did he have?" said de clerk.

"He sleep on de billiard table," Ah say.

"Den it will cost you fifty cents an hour fo' your pahtner," he say. Ah simply had to go through de hotel window befo' I could get away.

M'INTYRE—Well, dat's tough. It am a hahd world. Ah hab a tuff time gettin' by myself. Befo' you induced me to leab 'at liver' stable job Ah could place mah finger on a dozen jobs. Ah gots plenty ob jobs but dey don't seem to end well.

HEATH—What was yo' occupation befo' you became de boss ob dat liver' stable, Alexanduh?

M'INTYRE—Ah had a good job keepin' de flies out ob de pahk, but Ah couldn't keep dem out. Dey were too fly fo' me. So Ah got discharged.

HEATH—What did you do then, Lew Darbico?

M'INTYRE—Cut out 'at Lew Darbico stuff. Dat am de name you gib me in de minstrel show. Recline yo'sef to mah plain liver' stable name, Alexanduh. De next job Ah gets am wif a seegah sto'. Ah was painted up lak a Indian, and Ah haid to hold seegars in mah hand. If Ah didn't move all week Ah was to git five dollahs. If Ah did move Ah was to forfeit seven dollahs to de boss ob de seegah sto'. Ah lose money on 'at job. De boys come around an' stick pins in me an' Ah haid to move. It was no use, Ah haid to git another job, so Ah go to work holding de bull's eye in mah mouf in a shooting gallery. Ah had to leeb dat, too. A cross-eyed man came in an' knock all de teef down mah throat. So Ah get another.

HEATH—What den?

M'INTYRE—Ah become a one-man ferry boat syetem. Ah charged fifty cents to row any one across de ribber on Sunday mo'ning. One day de minister he say: "Alexanduh, Ah'm in a great hurry. Ah'll gib you two dollahs if you row me across befo' twelve o'clock."

"All right, jump in," says me.

He got in, an' Ah staht to row fo' dear life, cus two dollahs looked pretty soft fo' Alexanduh. Pretty soon de minister say to me:

"Young man, did you ebber attend Sunday School?" Ah said: "NO, suh."

"Then one quahtuh ob yo' life am gone."

Ah got skeered. You ought to see me row dat boat. Pretty soon he said:

"Young man, do you ever go to church?" Ah said: "No, suh."

"Then dat's half yo' life gone," he say to me. Oh, you should hab seen me row dat boat den!

Again de minister spoke up:

"Young man, do you say yo' prayers ebbery mawnin' an' night?"

"No, suh," I say.

"Then three quahtuhs ob yo' life am gone." Ah was skeered blue. Ah rowed wif all my might. Ah was so frightened dat Ah rowed de boat right into a rock an' capsized de boat. Ah swam 'asho' as soon as possible. Ah saw de minister paddling about in de watuh sputtering lak a cat.

"Mr. Minister," Ah said, "did you ebber learn to swim?" He said "N-N-NO."

"Well, de whole fo' quarters ob yo' life am gone," Ah said

HEATH—Dat was some town we played las' night.

M'INTYRE—Yass. Ah wonduh where dey git dose eggs dey tossed to us? Ah used to live wif mah brother out on a chicken ranch. One day one of his setting hens flew off de nes' an' would not go back. Brother asked me to sit on dem till de hen came back. Would you believe it, the minute Ah steps in dat chicken coop one ob de hens spoke up an' says, "Here am de keezer we am layin' fo'." Well, to tell de truth, Ah had been in de habit of stealing eggs from de coop ou de quiet. One day Ah was watched, an' jes' as Ah come out ob de coop Ah was struck by a aig. It was no ohd'nary aig, no plain resultant aig; it was a antediluvian aig—an antique. It had been lying in the nes' fo' a long time an' it was covered wif feathers. Ah knew de minute dat aig hit me aig broke. Ah couldn't be fooled, fo' Ah nebbuh see de air so dislocated befo'. Ah was surprised dat a aig could cover so much terr'tory. Ah nebber see anything spread lak dat aig did. Dere was nuffin it didn't bop on. Dat aig might hab been all right, but de hen what lay it wasn't properly vaccinated.

HEATH—Did you heah what Ah tole dat doofuh dis mawnin' when Ah ax him fo a job?

M'INTYRE—No, what you all say?

HEATH—Ah say: "Doc, a willin' puson desires a job and Ah am he."

"Ah would lak to know what you could do to be of use to me," he said.

"Ah can dig graves," says me

M'INTYRE—Dat reminds me. Ah tried to git a job at an undertaker's dis mawnin'. It was very early, and de undertaker wasn't up. Ah rang de bell 'bout seven times befo' he yelled down de tube.

"What in blazes do you want, and who are you?"

"Well, what of it? What do you want?"

"Nuffin," Ah yelled back, "only Ah want to tell you dat you am de las' man in dis town Ah will do business wif."

HEATH—When Ah was a gentleman an' a pohtuh on de Empire State Ah had some job. Ah was a loon to ever gib up dat job fo' de glare of de coal oil lamps on dese bum opree house stages.

M'INTYRE—How's dat?

HEATH—Oh de trains dere was always sumpin doin'. Heah it am one long job dat don't 'pear to be catchin' fo' meals. De ole lad Ah used to [illegible] dread just now reminds me ob one Ah met on de train in mah car. She called me a "sell."

"Po'tuh, will you tell me when we get to Schenectady?"

"Yes mum," says me

When de train stop at de next station de old lady comes back to de smoking booth in mah car an' say "Po'tuh, am dis Schenectady?"

"No mum, Ah'll tell youse when it am Schenectady."

But at ebbery station she a'k me and I don't pay out sayin': "Am DIS Schenectady, Po'tuh?" Ah gets a little mad an Ah say

"Lady, Ah done gwine tell you when we hit Schenectady." When we do Ah goes right up behin' her an' say

"Dis am Schenectady. All out fo' Schenectady." Ah looks at de ole lady. She doan make a move. Den Ah say: "Leddy, Ah believe it was you who wanted Schenectady. De train hab arrive at such a station. All out fo' Schenectady!"

"Ah heered you, Mistu Po'tuh," she answered.

"Well, den, lady, hurry up or you all gwine to be left. Doan you want to git out heah?"

"Oh, no, po'tuh," she say, "Ah doan want to git out. Mah daughtuh done tole me dat when Ah gits to Schenectady dat Ah mus' take mah Humburg tea. Will you bring me a little watuh, po'tuh?"

M'INTYRE—Some job

HEATH—Mah little brudder am a bright lad. When he went to school he used to do a lot of 'rithmetic lessons. One night he went into a delicatessen store an said to the man

"How much am three pounds ob sausage at sixty cents a poun'; fo' pounds of buttuh at thirty cents a poun'. five pounds of rolled creamed beef at fo'ty cents a poun'; how much am all dat?"

"That am five dollahs. Do you want to take de things wif you?" said de man.

"No," said mah little brother, "dat's mah 'rithmetic lesson fo' to-morrow. Ah wasn't sure ob de answer."

Grin's Modern Fairy Tales—"The Princess and the Frog"

Copyright, 1911, by American-Journal-Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

ONCE upon a time there was a little girl who worked for a mere pittance in a great department store. Yet, despite her arduous tasks and her small wage she was most beautiful, as beautiful in face, and of such demure and somewhat haughty deportment that all her store mates laughingly called her the "Princess."

She was slight and fair and wore a tight-fitting dress of the "princesse" pattern, which was another reason why her friends called her the "Princess."

At this time the "princess" dresses had gone quite out of fashion, but Mable, for that was the name of the poor girl whose chums laughingly called the "Princess," could not afford to change her dresses every three or four weeks to keep abreast of the styles.

To be sure, many of her friends in the store did this, but that is an entirely different story, quite distinct from a fairy story, so we will not mention it here.

Mabel was assistant on the lace counter and hoped some day to have full charge of it, because she was sorely in need of the money with which to support her invalid mother and cat and canary. The cat and the canary were not invalids, however.

Now it so happened that almost every girl in this great store cared to talk of nothing save their gentlemen friends. Some of them were quite proud of these gentleman friends, for they held good positions in stores and offices and earned as many as two whole dollars each day.

Of course, the "Princess" had many admirers, or young fellows who would have been admirers had she allowed them; but she was a very distant and cold little girl when the young men hovered around her, for she d d not care at all for them, apparently.

This was so different from the others in the store that it even came to the attention of the manager of her department, and it is indeed going some when such an important personage notices any employe in his department for any other reason save her own attractiveness, unless it be because of her inability to do her work properly.

One day the manager said to Miss Jinks, head of the lace counter, "The little 'Princess' that works with you is a hustler, and what I like about her is that she doesn't waste her time chinning with the men."

"Yep,"elegantly replied Miss Jinks, "she's a little crooked, I think; why, she doesn't even talk about them."

"Wish they were all like that," replied the manager, looking meaningly at Miss Jinks.

"Oh you git out, you big josher," politely responded Miss Jinks, sticking her chewing gum under the edge of the counter in readiness to wait on a customer.

And that is the way matters went for a long time. Friends of the "Princess" in the store used to make fun of her and hint that she couldn't catch a young man; but they knew better than this, because they knew the "Princess" turned down dozens of them almost every day.

"For th' love of feathers, Princess, why don't you grab some of them swell young men what's always hanging 'round tryin' to get a knock-down to you?" asked one of the Princess's friends one day.

"Who, me?" asked the Princess; "why, I ain't got time, dear, I'm so busy working; and besides, I don't care for them fellers that spend more on a necktie than they earn in a day. They may be good to look at, but as is a picture post card, and both of 'em is cheap."

"You're a funny kidde, all right, all right," replied her friend. "Why, I'd give my new ostrich plume to get acquainted with that lace drummer what's always tryin' to get you to go out to dinner with him."

The Princess laughed wearily and said she would introduce her friend next time he called.

And so it went on. The other girls in the store put about all their energy and brains into the task of finding some swell young man, and just managed to stumble through their work, while the Princess did not bother about the young men at all and soon became so efficient that she was made head of the lace department and was earning more money than many of the girls who had worked in the store for twenty years. All the lady clerks in a store, even if they are gray headed and grandmothers, are called "girls."

One day there was a new clerk in the store, a young man whose duty it was to take down bolts of heavy silk and assist the haughty woman in displaying them. He was probably one of the most unattractive young men ever in the store, because he had what is commonly called "pop" eyes and a large mouth. As he wore a sort of faded green suit it was not long before some of the girls called him a "frog."

"Pop eyes, big mouth, deep bass voice and green clothes, he's sure a frog," laughed the jolly girls; and so he became known as the "frog" all over the great store. The girls would only laugh at him when he asked for information concerning the goods in the store, and they made fun of him because he tried to learn about all the various departments.

"You just stick to your own mud puddle; don't try to learn everything, froggie," one of the girls told him. The young men in the store would sing, sotto voce, when his back was turned, "Oh, the bullfrog in the pool."

Finally this young man who was the butt of so many jokes and who seemed to be transferred from counter to counter, arrived at the lace counter over which the Princess had charge. When he asked her to show him something about the stock and prices, he nearly collapsed with surprise and joy, because, instead of telling him to "Hop along, frog," as the other girls had done, she spent half an hour showing him the stock.

"Why did you take so much paine with me?" the "Frog" asked the Princess one day after he had been at the lace counter a week.

"Because," replied the Princess, truthfully, "you didn't get fresh and try to flirt with me or make dates."

"Oh, I see," said the young man, still looking surprised.

Finally the "Frog" remained so long at the lace counter that there was considerable talk about the store.

"Gee, th' Princess has mashed th' Frog," said one of the girls.

And so for weeks every one in the store teased the Princess, or pitied her, or called her a fool for falling in love with the homeliest man in the store, and a cheap clerk at that, but the Princess only smiled haughtily and insisted there was no love affair.

One day the "Frog" said to the Princess, "If you don't mind, will you call me Henry, instead of just 'Mister?'"

"Surely," replied the Princess, "I hated to call you—that is, I didn't know and wouldn't ask"——

"Oh, that's all right, I didn't mind the others so much calling me the frog, but I would have felt badly had you done so. Now do you mind if I call you the Princess, you see I do not know"——

"Mabel—that is, Miss Holton," said the Princess.

"Thanks. Now I like you, because you haven't even smiled at me, except to encourage my work, and you haven't chewed gum since I first saw you, and you do not waste the time of the company talking with these young men. I want to know if you would be angry if I asked you to go out to lunch with me to-day?"

"I never do go out to lunch with young men, but I would go with you, because you are so sensible," responded the Princess, "only we both cannot leave this counter at once."

"Oh, I can fix that," said Henry, better known in the store, as the "Frog," and sure enough he did, although Mabel didn't understand how he did it.

Instead of going to Infant's Restaurant, where most of the clerks go, Henry handed Mabel into a large touring car that somehow mysteriously appeared, and took her uptown to a very exclusive cafe, where they had a wonderful lunch.

"We must hurry back or we will both be discharged, because it is long past our lunch hour," exclaimed Mabel.

"Miss Holton—Mabel, if any one discharges you I will discharge him," said Henry suddenly. "I brought you out here to ask you to marry me."

The Princess looked at him in amazement, then keenly, and with a woman's intuition, she knew he was sincere, then, womanlike, she put her head on her arms and sobbed a bit as she whispered "Yes."

"Then you will take a chance at being happy with a poor clerk, and one who is ugly enough in appearance to be called a frog," said Henry.

"I never"—— began the Princess, when Henry stopped her.

"Now or never," he said, and rushed her over to City Hall and got out a license and then to the little church and married her.

"We are more than an hour late," said the Princess as they entered Henry's automobile.

"We are never going back to work in that store," said Henry, "because my uncle, who owned it, and who just died, left it all to me. He made me work there, and I neither cared nor dared to disobey him, but now"—

However, the remainder of their conversation was nothing original, just the same old honeymoon line of talk, so right here we will leave the "Princess and the Frog."

The Adventures of Harold Hangover--By William F. Kirk

(Harold Hangover, the famous pitcher who came from Oshkosh, Wisconsin, after having invented the "Sneeze Ball" and the "Murphy Ball," not to mention a dozen other startling innovations, comes to New York and joins the New York Giants. He becomes mixed up in a bitter quarrel with Manager McGraw, and gets his unconditional release, after which he utters the immortal words: "McGraw and I were very thick. I was thicker than McGraw." Joining the Yankees, he has some startling adventures in Boston and New York, after which he goes to Detroit and defeats the Detroit Tigers by using his "Barber Ball" on Sam Crawford, who was formerly a barber.)

CHAPTER XLII.

"HAROLD," said Harold Chase to Harold Hangover, "I don't want you to feel that I am working you overtime, but I would dearly love to have you go back in for us again to-day."

"What!" shrieked Harold Hangover, forgetting for the moment the perfect poise that had stood him so well in hand when he was baggage-smashing in Wisconsin. "What? Again to-day? Why, man, that makes three days in a row! What do you think I am—a horse?"

"I know it is asking a good deal," admitted Harold Chase, "but the rest of my pitchers are going bad, and I know that you can get in there and win as often as I pitch you."

Our hero remained calm, though it was apparent that he was laboring under a great strain.

"My Chase," he said finally, and he said it with all the dignity of a sachem addressing an Indian council, "Mr. Chase, you are asking a whole heap of me, but I will go back in there this afternoon if you will promise me one thing. Promise me that after to-day's game I won't have anything to do till to-morrow."

"I promise, sir," said Hal Chase.

CHAPTER XLIII.

IT was almost time for the game to begin, and the loyal Detroit rooters were flocking to the park in droves. Out in the bleachers, where the fans are always more demonstrative than the enthusiasts in the stands, the arrival on the field of Harold Hangover was the sign for a cheer that the great Oshkosh pitcher will remember until his dying day. Not only was the cheering loud and sustained, but in it there was the strange something that signifies sincerity, and even Harold, hardened by many long campaigns, felt his eyes filling with tears, which he hastily brushed off with his fingernails.

"My friends," he said, stepping to the bleachers, "I do not know that I can find words to fittingly express my gratitude. I realize that I am here in a strange city—the first time I have ever been here. I realize"—

"Nix!" exclaimed Manager Chase. "How long will it take me to teach you not to talk to the bleacherites? This is the third time you have so far lowered yourself as to talk to those common people that have no claim on us or on our attention except that they keep us from clerking."

"My friends," continued the great Oshkosh pitcher, ignoring the words of his manager, "my friends, this is one of the happiest moments of my life. It is seldom that a professional athlete is touched as I have been touched to-day. It is seldom that I have had the cockles of my heart warmed as they have been warmed to-day by men upon whose leniency and friendship I have no claim whatsoever; upon whose leniency"——

"Beat it this way," said Manager Chase, seizing his new pitcher gently but firmly by the nose and leading him toward the bench allotted to the visiting players. "Now, you cut out all this Demosthenes stuff and get in there—and win. I ain't paying you $50,000 a year to talk—I want you to win."

For many years the people of Detroit have seen big league baseball. They are used to watching such shining stars as George Mullin and "Wild Bill" Donovan, and good twirling of the finest XXX brand is no treat to them. But the brand of twirling that they saw when our young Oshkosh hero got started was XXXXXX, which is just twice as good as XXX. It went into the sixth dimension, something that the human mind is utterly unable to grasp without becoming more or less nutty.

"Stupendous!" exclaimed a little Detroit druggist, after Harold had struck out the first twelve men.

"Why don't any of our boys take their turn running around those bases?" asked the druggist's wife, a superb beauty, in whose dusky orbs lurked all the mystery of the Orient.

"Keep your mouth closed, can't you, Sophie?" replied her adoring husband. "I ain't out here to do any school teaching; I want to see this game. Before I have to beat you up, take this last warning. Don't bother me no more!"

"Oh, you Harold Hangover!" came the admiring cries of thousands, as inning after inning went by and not one of the Detroit players connected with the ball. They couldn't even foul it. It was one strike, two strikes, three strikes, and all over. Even such mighty clouters as Crawford and Cobb were dumfounded.

"Stick one up here, bush-leaguer!" exclaimed Cobb in the ninth inning. The great outfielder was furious. Three times in a row had Harold Hangover struck him out with his "Sneeze Ball," and even the Detroit rooters were jeering at their pet. There were two men out in this last inning of the game, and the Yankees had one tally—always enough to win when the hero of Oshkosh was pitching for them.

"Mr. Cobb," announced Harold Hangover, "I am going to slip you something new to-day. I have no more snuff, and I respect your prowess so much that I don't care to take any chances with my ordinary curve or fast one. I am going to send you a ball that you couldn't hit in a thousand years. I am going to use my full speed, for the first time in my life. I am going to throw you one of my latest inventions—the 'whistling ban.'"

"Throw it up here, and I'll take care of it," shouted the thoroughly enraged Cobb.

Up came the "Whistling Ball!"

In less time than it takes to tell this (for the speed of Harold Hangover was proverbial) the ball had whistled its way across the plate, and Cobb, the "Georgia Peach," had missed it by two feet.

The "Whistling Ball" had whistled "Marching Through Georgia!"

The Loneliness That Is Breaking Valerie's Heart

They had plenty of time to catch the train; and on the train she had plenty of leisure for reflection. But she could not seem to think; a confused sensation of excitement invaded her mind, and she sat in her velvet-armed chair alternately shivering with the memory of Cardemon's villainy and quivering under the recollection of her night at Ashuelyn.

Rita was not at home when she came into their little apartment. The parrot greeted her, shrieking from his perch; the goldfish goggled his eyes and swam round and round. She stood still in the centre of her room, looking vacantly about her. An immense, overwhelming sense of loneliness came over her; she turned as the rush of tears blinded her and flung herself full length among the pillows of her bed.—From "The Common Law," by Robert W Chambers, in the September Cosmopolitan. How to Keep House While Your Wife's Away

THERE are several methods of keeping a house while one's wife is away on vacation. In this specially prepared course we will consider only three methods, as all others are impractical.

By all means keep a maid. It is the simplest solution of the entire affair.

To be sure, the maid may take a few groceries home to her married sister, and may feed the policeman, postman, gasman, iceman and grocer's man, but these are mere incidentals—and, besides, this is not a course in how to train a maidservant. However, your wife will hear about the maid—which settles that method.

Go to AN hotel.

In the evening you meet a few friends, and have a few drinks and play a little poker, and the first day's expense is something like $37.10.

That settles it, and also method number two. You know what you will do—you'll go to your own cozy little home, and read and smoke, and have a nice, quiet bachelor time of it.

After you leave the office you go directly to your home. There's a deep silence. Everything is musty and dusty.

And so you open the windows to let in some air.

But you neglect to pull down the screens when you do this. Result: 857,263,528,739,484,736,500 flies.

You soon remedy that. You go down the street only a couple of blocks and purchase some flypaper.

After spreading this about, you will be ready for your dinner.

Why, yes, you forgot—it's mouldy, of course.

That's nothing. Bread is cheap. You go two blocks and get some more. You won't be bothered with running about like this, so you get a dozen loaves. That will hold you for awhile.

Upon your return, next search the ice chest.

Some cream there, but it has soured. Some meat, but it seems to be a bit passe. And what is that gravy in the dish? Why, that isn't gravy; it is what was left of the two-pound hunk of butter.

Oh, ho! Now you understand. Of course you forgot to have the iceman fill the ice chest. There cannot be much ice there. No, you were right; there isn't much ice. There isn't even a damp spot where it used to be.

Now for some shopping. You go to the nearest grocery, as it is only three blocks away. It is closed!

Why, yes, to be sure, it is now 7:30. You forgot that. Oh, very well; you will slip over to some nearby cafe and get your dinner for to-night, and to-morrow you will stock up.

Next morning you are up bright and early. The first thing you do is to turn out the five gas jets you forgot and left burning all night. Then you buy steak and eggs and butter, and some canned stuff, and some condensed milk, and stock up your ice chest.

Then to cook some nice fresh eggs. That is simple. Just put a little water in a saucepan and drop the eggs in. You are hungry, and about three eggs will be right. You crack two of them and drop them in the saucepan, and then the third goes in, kerflop! but——

Well, of course one is liable to strike a bad egg now and then. You remember you should have broken them separately and you would have saved the other two. However, you start and break them singly in a cup. They are all right. You boil some water and put it in the saucepan and set it over the gas stove.

Hang it all that saucepan leaked, and the water ran out, and those eggs are as crisp and black as a piece of stovepipe!

Another saucepan. It doesn't leak. You drop or poach the eggs and start to eat them. My, they taste foolish! What ails them? Oh, yes, to be sure—forgot to butter the toast. That isn't all—oh, yes, forgot to butter the eggs—now they're not right—hang it all!—goshdingthisrotttenmesstoblazes!—what the—oh, yes, salt and pepper. Ha, ha! One on you! Forgot that ample thing!

Gee-whiz! you're late now. Never mind; do the dishes to-night. You're off! Where's your hat? Well——

After you pull the flypaper off the hat and clean it hastily and get into the office an hour late and miss a couple of business appointments, you sort of get your bearings.

That night you hurry home, determined to take hold of this foolishly simple housekeeping business and prove that you can get along as well as any woman.

No ice in the ice chest! Why didn't that fool iceman—well, you discover that he couldn't very well, because you didn't put out the ice card, and the door was locked.

The stuff is spoiled, and the wind has blown the fly papers over the carpet and on the plush easy chair and the tablecloth, and up against the new wall paper, and on the hardwood floor, and——

Lock up the dodrotted, dingedbinged old house, draw out a couple of thousand dollars and go to a blanked old hotel—that's what you'll do. And you beat it for the nearest telegraph station and wire your wife to come home.

A Handful of Refreshing Anecdotes Well Told by Bertie Fowler, the Vaudeville Monologue Maid

TWO men rushed out of a big hotel, hailed a passing taxi, and hopped in, saying to the driver: "Hurry it up, son." They talked excitedly as the taxi raced along. They rode for fully an hour and a half, when suddenly one of them glanced at the indicator and said.

"By gum! we must be near there," and then, leaning out of the cab window, he yelled: "Hey, driver, aren't we near there yet?"

"Search me. Where are you going?" came back the puzzled reply.

MOTHER employed an Irish girl to do the general housework. Nora was her name, and Nora was the cause of many a round of laughs. One day she did something that mother didn't like, and she sent for her.

"See here, Nora, I don't like the way you dusted the halls to-day. I'm afraid that I'll have to get another girl"

"By golly! mum, I'm glad to hear you say that. Sure, there's enough work for two."

• • •

TWO seedy looking individuals met on the street.

"Hello, Bill! What's new?" said one. "You look played out."

"Nothing new, Jack—nothing but work, work, work, work, work, from morning till night," answered the second.

"That so, Bill? How long have you been at that job?'

"I start to-morrow," answered Jack.

A YOUNG lady wanted to take up golf, and set out to buy a set of clubs.

"How many clubs do you want to purchase," asked the salesman—"a full set?"

"I'm sure I don't know how many clubs I do want," she answered shyly. "You see, I know absolutely nothing about golf or golf sticks. I'll have to confess that I don't even know which end of the caddie you use."

A POOR fellow was looking for a job as a comedian He was about as funny as a crutch, and had lost jobs faster than he could get new ones, but after many ups and downs he was given a "tryout" in a pretty good company.

The manager watched his work from the front that night and thought it pretty good. "I'll just sign that chap up," he mused as he went back of the scenes. He knocked on the funny man's dressing room door.

"Who's there?" came in response to the tap-tap-tap on the door.

"It's the manager of the show," was the reply.

"All right—all right! I'm packing up," replied the comedian in a wavering voice.

MACK and Marcus were travelling in Paris, and ran into a pickpocket whom all the actors knew on Broadway in New York. Mack displayed a new gold watch he had just received from the States as a present from a friend, and began pointing out the good things about the watch. Finally he turned to the back and showed the pickpocket the engraved initials.

"Nice piece of work, eh?" he said.

The pickpocket took the watch, looked it over with the eye of an expert, and after rubbing his finger over the engraved letters on the back turned to Mack and said:

"Oh, they're all right! You can get them out easy enough."

I KNEW two young chaps who played together as a team in vaudeville They called themselves the Pickle Brothers, and did a dancing act at the small vaudeville theatres and moving picture houses.

They struck a Summer resort town one week and were engaged to appear four times a day.

The more they worked the more the manager wanted of them. He came into their dressing room on the second day and said.

'Boys, you're going ee-mense! Now, to-morrow is my big day. Will you do two extra turns for me?"

Of course, they had to, for there was no way out of it. After that the manager came in again and said

"You hold her hand and say good night, as nicely as you can."

"Boys on Saturday I have ladies' bargain day I'll have to impose on your good nature once more Can you do eight turns for me?"

And they had to, of course They found themselves coming off at one side of the stage and going right on again at the opposite side. Every time they sat down in their dressing room for a breathing spell they would be rudely disturbed by the call boy, yelling

"Pickle Brothers, you're next"

That night the boys were pegged out and went to bed early in their room at the theatrical boarding house Along about 2 in the morning the place caught fire. All escaped in their night clothes. The fire chief walked up to the clerk and asked

"Yes," answered the clerk, looking over his register "Hold on a minute'" he yelled suddenly "By Jinks' The Pickle Brothers are still up there in 61"

The fire chief dashed up the stairs three at a time and stumbled along through the dark and smoke. Finally he found 67 and rapped hard on the door

All r-r-right! We're ready!" came the voices of the Pickle Brothers from within, and out they danced, half awake, in time to the tune of

"We are two happy Hottentots by Ky Kodee—
Happy, happy, HA PPY Hottentots
And from Africa we came Kitty kadoon—
That's where we get our name

THE funniest thing I ever heard' 'Tis this—a toast I once listened to at a dinner

You play a little ping pong
You have a little chat,
You make some candy fudges,
And then you take your ha
You hold her hand and say "Good night"
As nicely as you can
Now, isn't that a healthy fish
For a great big, healthy man"

I was in shipboard and mighty rough Pretty sick crowd I heard, too One man was making the rounds trying to aid his fellow creatures He noticed one woman lying lady propped up in a steamer chair Beside her sat a sicker man with his head resting in her lap The good Samaritan approached, and in a kindly voice said

"My good woman is there anything I can do to help you in your illness

"No, thank you she replied with a sad little tone. Then glancing at the head in her lap, he said.

Then can I help your husband'

"He's not my husband she answered, with a sickly roll of her head

'Who is he, then?" he asked

A RETIRED merchant decided to take a trip to Europe He had never been on the ocean before, and the same can be said of his wife They packed up and engaged passage, taking along their little son, Willie, who had toiled off six sweet Summers

Things went along jolly for the first two days. Fine weather Then came a blow and the old ship tossed about like a cork Everybody on board became seasick except Willie While every sick soul hung on the rail, Willie was romping up and down, laughing and yelling at the top of his shrill voice. The sickest pair of all was Willie's father and mother

Just at the height of Willie's gambol the mother turned to the father, hanging like a dishrag on the rail, and said with some determination

'John, a word to Willie!'

The father turned to the scampering son and in a voice hardly louder than a whisper said

'Hello, W W Willie'"

FATHER came to see me in the "1492" cast. He had never seen daughter "play act," and it was some occasion for him. Right proud he was, too He sat down in the front row, and, turning continually to the people at his elbows, remarked that "that one in the pink dress is my darter"

It didn't make any difference to father. He'd pick out any one of the girls. He couldn't have singled me out for sure on a bet Every time he'd see some one dressed particularly fetching he'd say: "That's Bertie; that's my darter"

In the show I had to play the boy in one of the scenes. When I came tripping out father guessed right for the first time. He sat straight up in his seat and yelled, "Well, I" be dinged if Bertie hasn't got on my pa's"

Father was right. I had swiped a pair from him and had been using them without his missing them.

Collins Teaches Punctuality.

President Collins of the city council has taught the members of that body a lesson in punctuality that was well deserved. It had become fashionable for some members ... to utterly disregard the prescribed hour for meetings ... to have meetings called to order over an hour later than the scheduled time. It might also be said ... The last regular meeting of the Council exhausted the patience of the chairman ... counsellors of Mayor Fitzgerald ... for lack of a quorum after waiting nearly an hour for the necessary number to arrive in order to call the meeting. The tardy members were angry. Mayor Fitzgerald was perturbed. Some of the members who were on time even objected. President Collins refused to relent and the ... that the lesson will accomplish its purpose.

Ignore Corrupt Practice Act.

Already the corrupt practice act, which limits the expenditures of candidates upon the State ticket, is being ignored ... of the candidates for the Republican nomination for Governor. Adhering strictly to the letter of the law a candidate would be limited to spending $5,000 in his fight for office. That policy ... will not ... pay half of the bills which have already been contracted by one of the candidates in the preliminary skirmish and the barrel has yet to be ... It is not alone the Republicans that are on the road to a breach of the statute. There are Democratic candidates for a number of offices whom the statute will not deter from liberal expenditures and who have not taken the trouble to find out how much they are legally entitled to spend. Some of those who framed the law are among the first to ignore it.

Barrett Again in the Field.

Harry N. Barrett of Malden who enjoyed the distinction of being the only Democratic representative ever sent to the State House from that city until ... Riley was elected for three successive years to the House is in the field again after a retirement of more than a dozen years. He is one of the three candidates for the Democratic nomination to the House. The others are former President Eugene ... of the Board of Aldermen and James Armstrong. Whether the Democratic organization of the city will support Barrett for the nomination and for election depends wholly upon whether he will go out and make a fight against A. Bliss, one of the present incumbents. The Democrats feel that it will be possible to beat Representatives Hawley and Blodgett, but they want to make it warm for Bliss, who is regarded as one of the most popular Representatives ever sent from that city to Beacon Hill.

Strecker on the Ticket

Charles B. Strecker will get the Democratic nomination for State Auditor and it doesn't take an astute statistician to figure that he has a splendid chance to win that office.

It used to be popular and the customary thing in the past to nominate good hearted souls for the minor offices on the Democratic ticket, forget all about them and devote whatever energy and finances were expended to making a fight for the head of the ticket. It looks like a different story this year and even the Republicans are privately admitting that the followers of the mule have the opportunity of a life time to secure several choice berths on Beacon Hill.

Strecker's candidacy is in line with

CONTRIBUTING EDITOR, SUNDAY AMERICAN'S SPECIAL AVIATION SECTION

THE progress in aviation since my visit to Boston last year is wonderful. When the history of aviation is written it will show the years 1911-12 as the crucial period in which the development of air navigation from a successful experiment to an adaptable commercial value was accomplished.

And look at this year's program.

The flight from Squantum to Nashua, to Worcester, to Providence and back to Boston in a single afternoon, shows the wonderful development of aviation in its commercial and stable advancement.

But the progress in aviation has been more in men than in machines.

We had the machines last year but it tested men's courage to fly them.

Now we have successfully passed the stage where there is fear connected with flying and we have found—in many cases with the sacrifice of fine young men—the pitfalls and the dangers of aviation.

Atwood Will Report Meet for the American

Famous Aviator Will Write Daily Articles of the Flyers

HARRY N. Atwood, the champion long distance flyer of the world, has been engaged by the AMERICAN to report the Harvard-Boston aviation meet at Squantum.

Mr. Atwood will have a signed article daily in the AMERICAN while the meet lasts. This is the first time that an actual star aviator has done such reporting for a daily paper. Aviators have written special articles but have not acted as reportorial experts, following a meet from day to day.

Mr. Atwood's name is on the public lips now. His marvelous rise to fame [illegible] from St. Louis to New York, thereby [illegible]

GREAT HARVARD-BOSTON AERO MEET IS OPENED ON THE SQUANTUM FIELD

BY F. J. McISAAC

BOSTON is looking upward. With a lot of dare devil airmen doing stunts in the sky, the most sordid and material would take a squint heavenward and the reformers need not take too much credit for the upward movement.

The Harvard Aviation Meet, with Claude Grahame-White and Beachy and Sopwith and the rest started with a bang yesterday afternoon, although Harry Atwood did not reach Boston in time to participate.

Squantum, which has been dormant for a year, came to life again, and the Atlantic station of the New Haven took on the appearance of a metropolitan terminal.

Here's an English Expression.

But this story properly begins when I took the train at the South Station and fell into the last remaining seat a fraction of a second ahead of a fat man who [illegible]

The train pulled out—that is an English expression, but Claude-Grahame-White is an Englishman and the aviation band plays "Rule Britannia" and "God Save the King" every time he sneezes.

Right away the aviation stuff began. In the seat behind were two men and one of them was talking.

"Yes," he said, "if I had only had a little more power in my engine it would never have broke down that fence and got put out of commission. It was

ATWOOD AND PARENTS IN BOX AT SHUBERT; CHEERS BY AUDIENCE

Harry Atwood, the aviator, attended the [illegible] of "Over Night" at the Shubert last night accompanied by his parents. He entered a box just after the first act started. Every eye in the audience turned toward Atwood and then the whole house came to its feet and cheer after cheer went up. Atwood stood up in the front of the box and bowed and smiled in response.

English Flyer Sees Wonderful Progress Made in Aviation Since His Visit to Boston for the Meet Last Summer.

Aviation will now go ahead by leaps and bounds. Men know about flying and about the air.

They understand aviation better. The age of daring as the prime requisite of the flyer has passed.

The man who flies and flies successfully must have brains as well as daring.

It does not do to have a man thousands of feet in the air, primed with daring and courage, if he does not know how to manipulate his machine in a squall of wind.

If he is not competent to meet an emergency in the air in a brainy, technical way, he is not competent to fly successfully. This has been proven.

The man of daring and daring only, who went in for aviation, has gone along, but the man who flew with his head is still flying, and successfully. No finer example of this is obtained than in such examples as your American aviators and inventors, such as the Wrights. They flew scientifically and they are still with us to fly for years to come.

When I decided to come to America, I thought I would buy Weymann's 100-horse Nieuport, but I could not get it. It is a wonderful machine, and I wanted the best.

I am, however, very well satisfied with my seventy-horsepower Nieuport.

I think your American aviators take too many chances. There is risk enough in flying without increasing the risk—at present, at least.

I think as the American aviators remain longer in the game they will become much more cautious. They will be less inclined to take the terrible risks which so often has deprived the aviation world of some wonderful flyers.

Personally, I don't care to take the greater risks. I am content to fly and fly, year after year, rather than by daring place myself among those who are past and gone and lost to aviation forever.

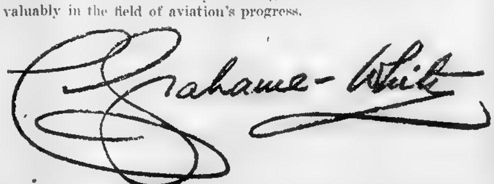
When a man first realizes that he can remain in the air, that he can travel at the rate of an express train successfully, he begins to take chances.

He is intoxicated by the newness and wonderful sensation of it all. He forgets that the mind lapse of a second may hurl him to his death. He forgets the dangers and thinks only of flying.

A man who successfully gets over the intoxication of flying and keeps himself down to the calm and steady handling of a machine has placed himself valuably in the field of aviation's progress.



100,000 SEE AVIATORS IN FIRST DAY'S FLYING

ONE hundred thousand people welcomed the harbinger [illegible] Squantum yesterday at the opening day of the Harvard-Boston aviation meet. They [illegible] wonderful [illegible] field was nearly [illegible] the huge [illegible] a flock of [illegible] on the [illegible] wheeled away to their [illegible]. The [illegible] crowd wended its way [illegible] well satisfied [illegible] demonstration of the [illegible]

The features of the day were the [illegible] speed [illegible] between Claude Grahame-White, the famous English aviator, and Eugene Ely, the American aviator in a Curtiss biplane; the bomb dropping of Miss Gwendolyn Leonard, a Boston girl who takes the honors of being the first woman to enter an aviation contest, and the fight for altitude honors in which three men soared above the 3,000 feet mark. Grahame-White proved again that he is the man first on the job and first in prize winning. He followed his record of last year of being the [illegible] to fly and took away $660 as his share of the day's winnings. His nearest competitors were Tom Sopwith, who [illegible] $260, and George W. Beatty, who earned $232.

Monoplane Shows Great Speed

The day's flying demonstrated the tremendous speed of the Nieuport monoplane which was flown for the first time in America by Grahame-White. This is the machine White hopes to win the big cross-country flight in.

One of the disappointments of the day was the non-appearance of Harry N. Atwood, Boston's own aviator and the world champion cross-country flyer. All day the question was repeatedly asked: "Where's Harry Atwood?" When it was announced on the field that he had left New York and would fly at [illegible] o'clock there was loud cheering from the crowd. Word of his arrival at the South Station was the cause of further cheering and his arrival at the field was momentarily expected. Then came news that he would not appear until Monday and the magnificent welcome that was awaiting him had to be deferred to give the aviator a much needed rest at his home. He will fly on the field at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon, according to the management of the meet, and a special welcome is being arranged.

The Contestants.

The flyers were Claude Grahame-White, who was the star of last year's aviation meet and is the best known of English aviators; Eugene B. Ely of the Curtiss camp of flyers, who was the first man to fly from and make a landing on the deck of a battleship in a biplane; Tom Sopwith, the 22-year-old English aviator, who won the $20,000 [illegible] prize for the longest flight out of England; W. C. Beatty, the Wright flyer, who broke the world's duration record while carrying a passenger at the Chicago meet, and Howard W. Gill, a Baltimore society man who competed in Chicago and was formerly a leader in racing automobile contests.

Lincoln Beachy, James V. Martin, Arthur Stone, Joseph S. Cummings, George H. Mannor, Earle L. Ovington and Clifford L. Webster were on the field with their machines, but did not enter the contests. In most cases their machines were not properly tuned for the [illegible] and duration events, so they put off flying until Monday.

Atwood Will Also Fly.

With the addition of Harry N. Atwood to this list, the coming week promises some of the most spectacular and keenly contested events that the country has ever seen.

There was little spectacular in the opening day's flying. The aviators flew with caution. It was demonstrated that death-dealing man-slaying stunts are not to be a feature of the Harvard meet. The spectacle of aviators turning somersaults in machines when 1,000 feet in the air and dropping to their death in the harbor would seem an impossibility under so carefully planned a meet. The foolhardy, inexperienced aviators are marked by their absence at the Harvard meet. It was a clean cut, business-like demonstration of the conquest of the air by man. Little else was attempted and therefore there is no tale of man-killing to write.

Thousands Line the Bay.

It seemed as if all Greater Boston had turned its attention to flying. All along Dorchester Bay from Squantum head to City Point thousands of people were lined in a solid bank along the waterfront, while in the centre of activity, the aviation field, 15,000 people filled the grand stands and auto parking spaces. Society turned out en masse. Motor parties came from Newport, the North Shore and the South Shore and witnessed the flying. Few names appearing in the Blue Book of Boston society were missing in the list of those who witnessed the events from the auto parking space.

The management of the events was excellent. A year's experience in handling large crowds had resulted in many innovations, which added to the comfort of the spectators. One of these was the introduction of comfortable, [illegible] chairs in the grand stand in the place of the old-time [illegible] so prevalent at last year's meet.

Good Weather for Flying.

From a weather-wise point of view it was a good day for flying. The wind held to eight miles an hour throughout the day and in the upper currents the men found but a light breeze blowing. It was comfortable for the spectators, and the sun's absence made it easy to watch the bird-men.

Grahame-White set a new record for the course by turning off eight laps, or a distance of 12 miles, in his new Nieuport machine in 12 minutes and 5 1-5 seconds. He flew [illegible] he made wide detours at [illegible] every turn of the course, which added fully a mile to his total distance.

Ely, in his Curtiss biplane, was but little behind Grahame-White and set a new record for the fastest time ever made over the course in a biplane. His time for the 12 miles was 13 minutes and 19 seconds. Grahame-White also showed wonderful speed in altitude flight, climbing to a height of 5,000 feet in 7 minutes and 20 seconds.

In the quick-starting contest Sopwith got away in 11 4-5 seconds and Beatty in 12 1-5 seconds.

Grahame-White Near Crash.

The nearest approach to an accident was when Grahame-White descended at the close of his speed trial. He came close to the ground as he passed the last pylon and directly in front of the grand stand, where, all unknowing, it [illegible] speed, [illegible] for the [illegible] There was a moment of suspense [illegible] thousands of spectators. White realized his danger and stood up in his seat. [illegible] should his speed not be checked [illegible]

[illegible] B. Harmon saw White's difficulty. He rushed forward to the [illegible] the wing [illegible] to check his speed and stop it five feet from the fence. White, as he stepped to the ground, said that he did not make the sweep down towards the fence intentionally. He is flying for the first time with the Nieuport control, which calls for warping the planes with his feet and the rudder control with his hands. This is directly opposite to the Bleriot control which he has always used. Harmon advised White to change the control to the Bleriot, for fear that White may have an accident before he can completely change the method of flying which he first learned and has always followed.

Girl Drops "Bombs."

The appearance of Miss Gwendolyn Leonard, daughter of Mrs. George H. Leonard of the Hotel Brunswick, in the bomb dropping contest made this event of special interest. The young lady came close to winning first prize for Tom Sopwith, with whom she flew. She was gowned in a blue serge suit and wore a green veil tightly drawn about her head. She walked across the field and took her seat with the utmost [illegible]. As she dropped each bomb from a height of from 100 to 300 feet she leaned well over in her seat, took accurate aim and dropped the bomb. She showed not the slightest fear and Sopwith said she was the coolest woman he had ever taken in his aeroplane. Her accuracy in bomb dropping resulted in a $50 prize for Sopwith.

Sopwith had a bit of hard luck. He took out his seventy-horsepower Bleriot monoplane ready for the speed contests, and in giving the engine a trial in front of his hangar a cylinder head blew out. This disabled the machine. The accident was attended by a tremendous noise and spectators who were watching him tune up the machine fled in alarm. Sopwith was in the seat smoking a cigar and with the same [illegible] with which he flies he calmly remained quiet until it was all over and then climbed out of the machine, the most unconcerned man in the crowd. He ordered the machine back into the hangar, and it will be several days before it can be repaired.

Four racers were in the air at the same time when the exhibition flights were called at 6 o'clock. Gill was still up about 2,000 feet in his machine with Sopwith flying under him at about 1,000 feet, [illegible] in his Nieuport at 1,000 feet and Beatty, with [illegible] Stars, the AMERICAN photographer, by his side, [illegible] over the field at an altitude of from 200 to 500 feet. It was [illegible] the four machines were flying one under the other. The [illegible] and was [illegible] and the 200,000 eyes of the 100,000 spectators were [illegible] at the wonderful demonstration as the closing [illegible] the aviators to the field and the day's events were at an end.

Beatty is bound to be one of the most popular flyers of the meet. He is a cool-headed unassuming chap, who is devoted to aviation. He graduated from the Wright school at Dayton but a week before the Chicago meet and there broke the world's record for duration in carrying a passenger. He remained in the air three hours, forty-two minutes and [illegible] seconds.

"Dick" Stars, the first New England photographer to fly with an aviator and the first man in the East to take pictures [illegible] through the air at an altitude of 700 to 1,000 feet and at the same time snapping pictures of the crowd below.

The day opened with a heavy rain and fog on the [illegible] and every prospect of a [illegible] day. Chairman Charles J. Glidden, who is an optimist and weather expert, said that it would be fair by noon and he proved a good weather prophet. Grahame-White warmed up his Nieuport machine in the early morning and up to 11 o'clock was the only man on the field.

The great crowd began to assemble shortly after noon and before 3 o'clock about every point of vantage within two miles of the aviation field had been taken up. As a preliminary to the first contests Beatty had made a flight with Miss Margaret Lawrence, leading lady of the "Over Night" Company, who said she enjoyed the experience immensely. She was neatly dressed in a long aviation coat, and wore a brown aviator's cap.

Off to the Launching.

Sopwith with a few turns of the course started off for Fore River to witness the launching of the Argentine battleship Rivadavia. He was told that the launching would be at 12:15 o'clock and was keenly disappointed when he hovered over the shipyard at that hour to find that the big vessel was not to be launched then. He returned to the aviation field.

To the tune of the "Aviator" march, played by the First Corps Cadets Band, the meet was officially opened at 3 o'clock. Miss Rose Fitzgerald was to draw the name of the first man to fly, but she was unable to be present and one of the committee did the drawing.

Sopwith was the first man off the ground. The smoke of the pistol had not [illegible] away when he was off in a pretty start. He circled the field flying low—at a height of 200 to 300 feet. He found the wind puffy and treacherous. His planes rocked back and forth, but he had perfect control of the machine. When over the grandstand he waved his hand and got a cheer from the crowd.

A Beautiful Landing.

He made a circle of the inside area and dropped in front of the grandstand in a beautiful landing. He was loudly cheered. His machine had just touched the ground when the pistol announced the get-away of Beatty. He then flew low to [illegible] the [illegible] and his get-away was in 11 [illegible] seconds.

[illegible] time was 12 1-5 seconds. Sopwith took first prize of $150 and the [illegible] while Beatty got second prize of $50.

Among the noted people seen on the [illegible] were [illegible] Lieutenant [illegible] Woodruff of New York, [illegible] Harmon, the multi-millionaire [illegible] aviator; Mrs. Charles W. Burrows, [illegible] Leonard and Miss Grahame-White, sister of the aviator, walked [illegible] Grahame-White tuned up his machine for the speed contests.

AMERICAN PHOTOGRAPHER DESCRIBES TAKING PICTURES IN AIR

DORCHESTER BAY AND THE HANGARS AT THE AVIATION FIELD PHOTOGRAPHED FROM AN AIRSHIP; THE START AND BEATTY AND ARTIST SEARS 400 FEET IN THE AIR

FIRST PICTURES FROM AEROPLANE IN EAST TAKEN BY AMERICAN ARTIST

THE first photographs ever taken in New England from an aeroplane in full flight were made by Richard W. Sears, staff photographer for the AMERICAN, at Squantum last evening at 6 o'clock.

Mr. Sears went up with George W. Beatty in a Wright biplane, was carried to a height of 700 feet at a pace of forty miles an hour, "snapped" five pictures with his camera and was brought back to earth. This was Mr. Sears's first aeroplane trip. What he thought of taking pictures from an aeroplane he tells as follows:

By RICHARD W. SEARS.

Taking pictures from an aeroplane is the real thing—when you get used to it. You have a full view of everything. There is no one to butt in and to interfere with your operations.

This was my first trip in an aeroplane. It was the first time in New England that a photographer has "worked" from an aeroplane in full flight. It was the third time in the United States, for that matter.

After a rather uneasy night's sleep I was assigned to the sky snapping job the day before—I went to Squantum. I found Mr. Beatty at 3 o'clock, but he was not ready for me till 6. I waited and all my friends who heard I was going up took particular pains to say good-bye to me so as to make me feel real comfortable.

At 6 o'clock Mr. Beatty said, "All ready, Dick?"

"All ready," says I. I ran over to my brother and borrowed a pair of gloves from him. He said 'Good-bye, Dick,' real cheerful like—not.

Dropped Camera First Thing

I climbed on somehow and grabbed hold of a strut or something. I had my camera slung around my back by a strap.

Beatty got in his seat. He shouted at me, "Hey, put your feet on here; not there, and remember three things. Don't touch that wire hanging over your head. Don't touch your hands to these levers. Don't move your feet over where mine are. If you do, it will be good night for both of us."

"Gee, that sounds fine for a starter," I said.

I put a plate-holder in my camera, for I was to use plates. I started to focus the camera. Just then Beatty waved his hand and let her go. We started up and I dropped the camera first thing. Lucky I had that strap around my neck. I got hold of the camera again soon [illegible].

For the first fifty feet up I had the funniest feeling I ever knew. Then I thought, "I'm up here to take pictures, not to feel queer."

I looked down and got used to it. All this happened, mind you, in about [illegible] seconds.

Before we turned the first pylon I had my first picture. We were 200 feet up. I snapped Dorchester Bay for a starter. Then I snapped it again.

We turned the second pylon, still climbing higher and higher. I snapped Neponset [illegible] at 400 feet height.

The wind blew so hard I could [illegible] put the slides in. They were almost [illegible] around out of my hand.

We made a second turn by the [illegible] start, heading toward the crowd. I [illegible] a picture of the crowd. I waved my [illegible] I saw my brother wave back.

I said to Beatty, "Gee! this is [illegible]"

He [illegible] back at me. "What [illegible] around again?"

I shouted back at him, "Yes, [illegible]"

"Me for an Aeroplane."

BOSTON GIVES ATWOOD OVATION ON ARRIVAL

HUNDREDS of cheering aviation enthusiasts gave a great ovation yesterday afternoon to Harry N. Atwood, the hero of the St. Louis-New York flight, on his arrival in Boston to contest in the Harvard Aeronautical meet at Squantum.

[illegible]

He [illegible] at the South Station from New York on the Bay State Limited at [illegible] o'clock. A big crowd was awaiting him there. Mr. Atwood did not fly at Squantum [illegible] ready for Monday's events.

Greeted by Parents.

Besides the army of spectators on the field it is estimated that there were at least 15,000 who awaited the Burgess [illegible] at the field.

Atwood found a new Burgess-Wright machine awaiting him when he arrived. The machine was brought over from Marblehead by W. Starling Burgess.

Lieutenant Milling of the United States aeronautic corps, stationed in Washington, inspected the biplane and said it was a "dandy." [illegible] The machine is the same kind as the one in which Atwood made his cross-country flight from St. Louis to New York.

Taken to Field by Auto.

When Atwood, with his mother hanging on his arm, walked through the gate at the South Station a burst of handclapping greeted him. He lifted his hat and smiled, then walked on through the station to where an automobile was awaiting him.

When the train arrived, Samuel S. Atwood, the aviator's father, with Mrs. Atwood and G. S. Curtis of the Burgess company were waiting [illegible]

Any high spots along this course will be natural viewpoints for the local population.

Worcester, Watch at 1:30.

Worcester people may look for the aviators about 1.30 to 2 o'clock that afternoon, according to present estimates. The actual landing place at the end of the second leg will be the Worcester fair grounds at Greendale.

But the aviators can be seen to utmost [illegible] from any quantity of places in [illegible] of the heart of the Commonwealth.

In the first place, Worcester is a city of hills. And every hill will be a free [illegible] Greendale fair grounds [illegible] situated in a hollow, much like an [illegible]

[illegible] the best place in Worcester to watch the birdmen for nothing will be Green Hill Park. On the north side of this tract of land and at an elevation of 783 feet above the level of the sur[illegible] is the old reservoir [illegible] supplied water for [illegible] house. The walls of this [illegible] slope down [illegible] All a person will have to do at Green Hill Park is to recline [illegible] the reservoir banking and gaze up at [illegible] birdmen as they [illegible] glimpses at a flying swallow. There promises to be a tremendous popular "[illegible] movement" along the reservoir bank [illegible] Day afternoon.

[illegible] aviators fly to and from the [illegible] fair grounds at an elevation of [illegible] they will be less than 500 feet [illegible] heads of Green Hill spectators.

Third Leg to Providence.

[illegible] Worcester the birdmen will start [illegible] leg of the [illegible] ward [illegible] This will take them through [illegible] Blackstone. The natural [illegible] will be a [illegible] This means that they will [illegible] Vernon Hill and Mt. St. James [illegible] Worcester. [illegible] demand for roof privileges in Worcester. The State Mutual, Slater and Chase buildings particularly will accommodate thousands of spectators on their broad roofs.

Winging along down the Blackstone valley, the aviators will pass over Millbury, Blackstone, Woonsocket, Pawtucket and into Providence, the third resting place in the long flight.

They should arrive over Providence about 3 o'clock, so the flying time over interven[illegible] will be in proportion [illegible] distance from Worcester.

The official landing place in Providence is Narragansett Park. But the public will find many places about the city from which full view of the approach and departure of the contestants may be observed free.

See Them Cross State line.

Neutaconkanut Hill, in the so-called annexed district of Providence, is cited as the best spot of all. Thousands of Providence people will be on that hill Labor Day. Located as it is, on the outskirts, this hill furnishes a clear view of fifteen miles in all directions. The race will be three-fourths over at Providence, so the spectators on Neutaconkanut will be [illegible] a line on the comparative [illegible] They may be able to pick the winner from that point [illegible] the race is very close.

[illegible] will be able to spot the aviators almost as soon as they cross the State line. They can follow their progress to the landing place and pick them up when they start away on the last leg to Boston.

Car facilities to Neutaconkanut are good. Several trolley lines run to the base of the hill. The top of the hill is laid out in a park which will accommodate thousands.

There are many other places in Providence from which to watch the race. Prospect terrace on the east side is especially good.

So far as the tops of the buildings go, there will be fine views in Providence from the Banigan, Union Trust and Industrial Trust roofs, from the State House dome and City Hall tower.

Dexter training field will be a good place, also, for the aviators are scheduled to pass directly over it.

Fourth Leg Back to Boston.

The fourth [illegible] of the race, from Providence back [illegible] and Squantum is forty-four miles. Leaving Providence, the aviators will fly over Attleboro, Mansfield, Canton Junction, Readville, Hyde Park, Milton, Quincy, Atlantic and to the Squantum field.

They may finish at Squantum field by [illegible] p. m. There are no end of high places along the [illegible] Boston course from which [illegible] view may be obtained as [illegible] speed along to the finish.

Spectators in Atlantic and especially in the neighborhood of the aviation field will be particularly favored, as they will see both start and finish.

Bearing in mind the estimated time at which the aviators will approach and leave the landing places all that the people living along the course have to do to see the aviators free is to pick out the nearest vantage point, go there, make themselves comfortable and wait for the racers.

ATWOOD'S OWN STORY OF HIS RECORD FLIGHT

By HARRY. N. ATWOOD.

The flight from St. Louis to New York [illegible] great experience [illegible] most part, I have [illegible] Naturally I [illegible] able to make an A[illegible] cross-country record that is also [illegible] but what [illegible] most is that what I have been able to accomplish seems to prove, in my opinion, that our American continent can be [illegible] crossed [illegible] from [illegible] that in doing so the [illegible] can land safely almost at will, provided, of course, he is careful and uses good judgment.

Until the first part of my flight Friday afternoon there was no time during my entire journey that I did not have a place to save my life if necessary. The moment [illegible] practically did not [illegible] from the fields [illegible] Newark. Getting out of the pocket [illegible] landed in was, to say the least, somewhat exciting. Kind friends there, to the num[illegible] of [illegible] lifted my machine [illegible] into a field that made a [illegible] starting point than where I had landed. Then they cut down the trees in front of me and made a clear space between the trees just big enough for me to fly through. I really think that I touched the branches of the trees on both sides as I went into the air.

Now a word as to what I have won, in order to set myself right. The only money I got out of the flight is the $10,000 offered by Mr. Victor J. Evans of Washington, a check for which amount Mr. Evans handed me on my arrival in New York. Out of that $10,000 I have to pay the promoters with whom I contracted for twenty official stops en route $4,000 for allowing me to cancel the last twelve stops I was contracted to make. That I agreed to do at Lyons, N. Y., which was the eighth of my official landings. The reason I paid to have the remaining stops cancelled was because I was tired of the show part of it. I wanted a rec[illegible] [illegible] to stop when I wanted to and to keep on going when I wanted to. [illegible] Since leaving [illegible] the [illegible] record I have had in mind was a new world [illegible] for cross-country flying. I am happy because that reward is [illegible]

All kinds and sizes of wind gusts prevailed over the Hudson as I came down the river, and in order to minimize the [illegible] due to them I started [illegible] of the river, my [illegible] being [illegible] 100 feet above the [illegible] The draughts were about as contrary as any I ever combated, and at times I was blown down until I don't believe I was much [illegible] above the surface of the water.

All Kinds of Air Currents.

Well, I was not long in getting all I wanted of the east side, and so I switched my course over the west side flying just above the Palisades. So, even I touched the tops of the trees on the Palisades, due to the depressing effect of the different air currents that prevailed.

Off Manhattan Island I was no more than fifty feet above the water, and passed so close to the smokestacks of several boats that I could detect the heat of the smoke as it came out of them. Off Jersey City I passed over one ferryboat that did not seem to be much more than ten feet below me. I mean, of course, the tops of the funnels. I could hear the people on the boat cheering me as I swept past, and it seemed to me that a thousand whistles were blowing, but I don't suppose that there was a tenth of that number in action.

Off the lower part of the island came the most anxious moment of my whole trip. That was when I neared Governors Island and began to manoeuvre preparatory to heading for the landing place there. It was very foggy, and I could not see the island any too well, so I went up several hundred feet so as to get the lay of the ground before pointing for the ground. I was just a bit nervous then, for I realized that in a minute or two more the flight would be mine, and I did not want anything to happen at the last moment. I climbed until I had plenty of gliding room, and then I came down, and the flight was over.

One Engine for Trip.

I made a rail distance of more than 1,260 miles with one machine, and the only time I had to stop for repairs of any sort were at Nyack. The plane was the one I used from Boston to Atlantic City and the engine the one I used from the last named place to Washington. The plane is still as good as new and the engine never worked better than it did yesterday. However, the engine had two new connecting rods, which may account for its fine work, and until it is overhauled and tested I would not use it again for a cross-country flight of any considerable distance. To sum it up I am of the opinion that the life of an aeroplane is indefinite and the length of that life depends upon the care and judgment with which it is operated.

As for the trip in general, the part of it that appealed to me most was coming down through the mountains of New York State. Only once did I feel like what some newspapers refer to as a "bird man," and that was Thursday, when I circled over West Point. I certainly did want to land there on the parade grounds, but the tall buildings inclosing it and the big crowd made me decide that it was better to re-cross the river and come down nearer Cold Spring.

When I crossed over I knew that I had only gasoline enough to last me about ten minutes, so there was no time to be lost. I looked everywhere for landing places, but the only one that looked good to me was on top of Baxter Mountain, and so I decided to climb the 1,013 feet to its summit. That was the one and only time during the entire flight that I felt like what they call "birdman." The sensation as I climbed up the side of that crag was the greatest I ever had. I just simply floated on until I got to the top and then I landed on a ledge.

Prefers Low Altitude.

I do not agree now with many other aviators who believe that in flying through mountainous countries it is safer to fly high. My opinion is that when you have a valley and a river to follow the lower you fly the better, especially if the river is not a rocky one. I would rather land in a river than on a rock on top of a mountain. Then in valleys the wind is lateral, and a lateral wind is much better for an aviator than a treacherous downward gush such as you often strike when flying high over great natural elevations. You are not nearly so apt to capsize in a lateral wind. I flew low all the way down from Castleton, and I had no gusts, such as I speak of to contend with at all.

Off the great lakes, however, I had a lot of trouble due to the wind, and I would think a long time before I undertook the lake part of the flight again. In the event I do try to cross the continent, I am certainly going to arrange my route so as to avoid the great lakes. Many times while I was flying near the lakes I had to battle with whirlwinds, while all the way from Chicago to Buffalo I had to fly with the greatest caution, as a result of these contrary winds that swept in from the lakes.

The flight also convinced me that it is possible to land in all sorts of countries. For instance, at Lyons I landed on a hill 300 feet above the town; at Amboy, near Syracuse, I came down in a marsh; at Fort Plain I landed in a rocky meadow on top of a mountain; at Castleton I landed on the side of a mountain; at Glen when I came down I was 1,250 feet above the surrounding country; at Cold Spring I was about 1,200 feet above the river; at Nyack I landed in a pocket about 150 feet square, and in New York City I landed on island. A brief step in a desert was all that I needed to make the list complete, except, of course, a landing in the water, and I was prepared for that after I left Castleton.

Of course, the flight had its amusing side. At Elkhart a man went around selling lead pencils for people to write their names on my machine with. As you know, a farmer up-State charged admission to his field to see my machine, while at every place there somebody who was waiting to tell me how to finish my flight the most proper and scientific way. But everybody was nice, and I am deeply grateful to them all.

I don't know when I [illegible] I [illegible] try to cross the continent [illegible] and then again I may decide to stay at home and let some one else fall a few [illegible] at that great feat. I believe, however, that it is possible to [illegible] flight.

GRAHAME-WHITE HAS NEW PLANE TO SHOW

Claude Grahame-White's Nieuport machine is the sensation of the Harvard-Boston aviation meet. It is the first Nieuport to be used in this country. Its strange, cigar-shaped body and sweeping wings make it the most startling machine ever seen in the air here.

It was a tremendous effort for White to get the machine for this meet. He came here on short notice, and sent a rush order to the Nieuport company for a complete, latest-type machine. There was none in stock, and the factory was worked day and night to get out a machine for him to ship to this country in time for the meet. It is in this machine that White hopes to capture the $10,000 cross-country flight from Squantum to Nashua, Worcester, Providence and back to the aviation field on Labor Day.

M. Nieuport, inventor and manufacturer of the machine, is a pioneer of aviation. His practical experiments began soon after Esnault-Pelterie, the Voisin brothers, Bleriot and Santos Dumont had begun their work—in the days when a hop of a flying machine for a few hundred yards was a big event.

Genealogically his machines may perhaps best be described as descended, on our side, from Robert Esnault-Pelterie, and on the other from the Santos Dumont. But whether Pelterie steadily developed in the direction of greater speed, greater power and greater weight, together with practical attempts as to reducing head resistance, and while the Santos Dumont machines became steadily lighter and lighter, Nieuport kept steadily to his "medium" ideal of a small, light, fast and scientifically designed machine which would fly with small power because it was properly designed to do so.

By careful wing design, the internal construction of which is the subject of a special patent, he produced a wing which, it is said, gives the maximum of lift with a minimum of drift, and is extremely light though at the same time so strong that only a single stay wire is needed to hold it down to the chassis. By further experiment and attention to detail, he produced a fuselage which gives remarkably little head resistance, at the same time giving ample accommodation to the pilot and plenty of strength to withstand the shock of landings.

Then he managed to cut the landing chassis down until he produced a little affair of steel tubes and a leaf spring with a couple of tiny wheels. This looks quite inadequate and yet in practice stands quite as much knocking about as some more elaborate and much more weighty arrangements.

The Nieuport machine up to the present has had a good record in the matter of accidents. The only fatality in a machine of this make was the death of Lieutenant Count de Caumont la Force, who was killed at Buc while experimenting with a Nieuport with a 100-horsepower Gnome engine. His rudder jammed and he forgot to cut off his engine, with the result that he hit the ground hard and broke both his legs, dying later the same day. It is said that if he had been attended to on the spot instead of being taken to Versailles in a farm wagon he would have survived.

The Nieuport machine is rapidly becoming popular in France, and on one day, early in May, as many as seven Nieuports were all in the air at the same time at the Mourmelon school. Several crack flyers besides Grahame-White have taken up the machine, among them being Weymann, the American whose recent success in winning the Gordon Bennett Aviation Cup at Eastchurch, England, gained for his machine the title of the world's fastest aeroplane.

KEEPS DOWN HOUSE BILLS

London Firm of Specialists Finds Society Best Customers.

LONDON, Aug. 26. The marked increase in the cost of living in London has led to the establishment of a firm of house bills specialists who undertake to check and pay tradesmen's accounts in large households. Society women who are usually too occupied and have no time for the scrutiny of household bills, have begun to feel the alarming growth of the domestic budget.

The new firm's very first customer was an American peeress, the Countess of Essex, whose experience during her entertaining campaign this season gave her a startling insight into the methods of West End tradesmen. The next customer was the Countess of Chesterfield, one of the famous Wilson beauties, who is noted for her extravagance. The company receives two and one half per cent. on the amounts saved, and they are already doing a lucrative business.

He hands a few smashes to his old enemy, "the New York Morgan New Haven Boston & Maine-Boston & Albany-rail road trolley [illegible] monopoly." He roundly criticises the [illegible] "big business," which has ceased to run, he says, on a moral business basis.

He advises the Republican party that it must get back to its old platform, which stood squarely for no special privileges for any man or group of men, if it wishes to be the party of the future.

A Sunday AMERICAN reporter found Mr. White at his office on Park street. Quoth [illegible]

[illegible] With [illegible] the window, [illegible] Mr. White [illegible] ing his chair as he crossed the room and so on and so forth. Just take the goods as I give it to you.

"Is that agreed? Well, here goes:

Mr. White's Statement.

"I find in the statements of the other candidates for the office of Governor of Massachusetts practically nothing which shows any particular public record, or any [illegible] to the citizens [illegible]

[illegible] occupancy of high political positions [illegible] require a record of public service rendered and of laws enacted beneficial to all classes, as well as ideas or pledges to [illegible] in the future. The [illegible] Massachusetts are entitled to know what each candidate has accomplished [illegible] but what laws the candidate [illegible] placed upon the statute books.

[illegible] of office, simply because political [illegible] rotation, should not be [illegible] qualification for further preferment [illegible] to win, linked with record, should be of the most con[illegible]

"Following My Leads."

"It is amusing to see the other candidates follow my leads. One of them is advocating the Grand Trunk's entrance into Boston, when it was he who assisted the New Haven to create its monopoly, a monopoly which is one of the principal drawbacks to the Grand Trunk's entrance.

[illegible] 1907 [illegible] the State to old age [illegible] advocated by Louis [illegible] savings bank insurance [illegible] in Massachusetts [illegible] this bill, and assisted [illegible] so bitterly fought by the Metropolitan Insurance Company, I organized a league at that time which represented by signatures and votes more than 300,000 people.

"The bill became law, and the wage earners of Massachusetts have already taken out life insurance policies or old age pensions to the number of about 5,000. The rates of [illegible] great opposing companies were materially reduced immediately subsequent to the passage of this legislation, and greater benefits given. In this connection Collier's Weekly recently stated that this bill 'means a saving which continually and rapidly increases. Soon it will amount to about $1,500,000 a year in Massachusetts alone, and in the whole country to nearly $20,000,000.'

Anyone Can Shout Reform.

"Any candidate can cry out for reform in finances. It is one of the easiest cries to raise. Somebody will always be doing it, but efforts to pass needed laws giving real relief is the real function of a public servant. I have always endeavored to protect our citizens by striving for direct and speedy relief for existing conditions affecting men, women and children of the Commonwealth.

"Neither of my opponents seems willing to discuss the history of the transportation now confronting Massachusetts and New England. I cannot find that either of my opponents at any time opposed the transportation monopoly obtained in defiance of the laws. I have been for five years opposing step by step this New York Morgan New Haven Boston & Maine [illegible] & Albany railroad trolley [illegible] monopoly, spread like a spider's web on land and sea, having a vice-like grip on New England's finance and commerce. During the past five years I have also been advocating from the public platform in cities and towns throughout the Commonwealth and without the assistance of the other candidates for Governor the entrance of the Grand Trunk into New England, and especially into Boston.

Would Fight for the Grand Trunk.

"If elected Governor I shall do all in my power to make an entrance for the Grand Trunk, thus benefiting the whole State, increasing our imports and exports, providing better opportunities for labor, and better transportation facilities, and also giving to a complete monopoly that [illegible] competition to which the public [illegible] entitled and [illegible] alone Boston [illegible] developed.

Springfield, Worcester, Palmer, Boston and other cities and towns are demanding the [illegible] of the Grand Trunk. I fore[illegible] a number of years ago. [illegible] opponents then? It is [illegible] my attitude on this question [illegible] I cannot believe that the [illegible] those who have assisted [illegible] sure in bringing about [illegible] even now endeavoring [illegible] Grand Trunk's entrance [illegible] time to mention [illegible] of New England, [illegible] have indorsed my [illegible] on the New Haven issue. Public [illegible] it was against the creation of the Boston Holding Company, the device by which the New Haven secured its final [illegible] grip upon transportation. I ask [illegible] the merchant, the traveling public, the railroad employe, and the consumer, the one who ultimately pays the freight, to remember what happened.

Opposes Pernicious Lobby.

"Our modern civilization necessitates great corporations, but it does not demand that our laws shall be broken and transportation competition annihilated to please some New York financial geniuses. It must be remembered that Massachusetts is not a producing State. We are converters. We import raw materials and export the finished product. Our very existence, our influence, our markets and our prosperity depend upon our transportation facilities. As Governor Guild said, and as Governor Douglas reiterated, we should not be controlled by aliens, foreign to our laws and traditions.

"I am opposed to the pernicious influence of the lobby. This is well demonstrated by my bill of this year, which can leave no doubt as to my attitude on this subject. I am also opposed to politicians, members of State or city committees, being employed as lobbyists, or, if you prefer the term, legislative counsel. Their influence is pernicious.

"I have worked for good tenement laws, for proper inspection of factories and for many measures beneficial to the public health. The Foss veto of the Ellis milk bill, advocated by the AMERICAN, was a shame. This bill, so strongly urged by a unanimous press, would not have hurt the farmer. At any rate, it was Foss's bill, especially requested by him and then killed by his own veto. This veto means the loss of the lives of countless children now drinking dirty milk and was a most pitiful political move.

Is for Eight-Hour Law.

"I am a bookbinder and an employer of labor. At my plant in Cambridge my employes have for some years been upon a forty-eight hour per week basis. This system I inaugurated there myself, wholly voluntarily and upon my own initiative. It was not [illegible] a trifle [illegible] to see every industry upon the same basis [illegible]

"It is [illegible] been my aim in public life to assist those who needed assistance, and that will still be my aim if elected Governor. Among the most important measures that I have had enacted into law are the three anti-tuberculosis bills that were passed during the last session of the Legislature. These were advocated by Edward F. McSweeney of the Consumptives' Hospital trustees. They were indorsed by practically all the anti-tuberculosis organizations in Massachusetts and the idea embodied in them was indorsed by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis at its annual convention in Denver this year.

"This law requires that each city and town in the State, either individually or in groups, subject to the approval of the State Board of Health, shall erect at least one hospital for those afflicted with consumption, while the State assists each city or town maintaining such a hospital by the payment of $5 per week for each person treated who is unable to pay his or her way. This is a most far-reaching law, and puts Massachusetts foremost among her sister States in the work of crushing out the great white plague.

Favored Compensation Act.

"My work on measures affecting the great majority of our people is well known, and I am [illegible] support of the workingmen [illegible] New Bedford, Fall River [illegible] Lowell [illegible] Lynn [illegible] Worcester, Springfield and other cities.

"The wage earners of the State will remember that [illegible] the Workingmen's Compensation Act. This is now a law, and it will give immediate and fair payment to the injured employe. This act has already been pronounced constitutional. The employe no longer finds himself surrounded by the old legal entanglements which should have been done away with long ago.

"These are only a few of the measures in which I [illegible] and still am interested. I voted for the fifty-four hours labor bill for textile establishments this year. I also put through the bill for a minimum wage scale for the Metropolitan Park employes. This bill was vetoed by Brother Foss, but his veto was not sustained.

"In 1909, as chairman of the Committee on Education, I put through the bill [illegible] Education. This bill was advocated by Governor Draper in his inaugural, and it insures in the future industrial training in our schools. Thus our boys and girls may learn a trade in connection with their studies and not be obliged to pick one up as best they can after leaving school.

Get Back to Old Platform.

"For four years on the Ways and Means Committee, which is the Finance Committee of the Legislature, and for the last two years as its chairman, I have consistently done my utmost for our State institutions with their 24,000 inmates. I [illegible] that the work on this committee is the hardest pertaining to any position on Beacon Hill, and certainly I am familiar with the State's finances and its institutions.

"This year it was a pleasure for me to advocate the anti-monopoly bill. This is now law. I am irrevocably opposed to the loan shark business, and am glad that I could assist in passing the bill providing effectual supervision and restriction of this business which went through this year. This year, for the first time, I voted for the Direct Nomination bill.

"The Republican party must get back to its first platform of 1856. I think, if it wants to be the party of the future. That platform stood squarely for no special privileges for any man or group of men. Some of this earliest party teaching has been lost.

"I remember that Senators Platt and Depew were both opposed to the parcels post. Peculiarly enough, Platt was the chairman of the Board of Directors of the New York [illegible] and also president of the United States Express Company, while Depew was the largest stock holder in the American Express Company. It is no wonder that they opposed a parcels post. Here was a case where politics and big business went hand in hand. I quote this merely as an example, for I wish to say that this is the sort of thing which seems to me to be one of the greatest dangers to our national existence.

"I have every sympathy, however, for fair and reasonable demands of capital. Also I appreciate that it is sensitive, timid and fearful of detrimental legislation. The state of affairs has been brought about by countless examples similar to that mentioned above. Capital has been politically its own worse enemy. By attempting to control national and State politics it has created suspicion and unrest in the minds of the public. It is my earnest hope that in the future politics and capital will be divorced, and that they will let each other alone. If capital would assist in clean politics, and in making clean politicians, it would be far better for all concerned than corporation political control.

"I am a protectionist. I believe in a careful revision of the tariff where such revision is reasonable and necessary. I deplore the Democratic attempts to attack the tariff, regardless of reason, facts or figures. The textile industries of Massachusetts are entitled to fair protection [illegible]

"Our textile industries are the backbone of Massachusetts' welfare. Already the Democratic agitation in Congress has been responsible for throwing out of work many of our mill employes, and I find that these mills are running on less than half their capacity in Lawrence and other large mill centres, and I deplore the hardship and suffering which must follow.

Not Decided on Reciprocity.

"As to reciprocity? I must confess that I have had little or no time to make a careful study of it. But I do believe that the great majority of people who clamor for it appreciate its results. I know the farmer and the agriculturist are opposed to it. I myself do not see how it will reduce the cost of the necessaries of life. I cannot reconcile myself to the fact that our fish industry should be injured to the advantage of Canadians by the reciprocity pact without its being given careful study by the Tariff Commission, to which I consider it entitled as much as any other industry or schedule.

"I am speaking now without much study on this question, but one thing I fail to see is the justice or consistency of this situation. This, however, is a national more than a State issue and rests upon the shoulders of our Representatives in Congress. [illegible]

This situation is wrong and unbearable. The higher the express rate the [illegible] particularly in Massachusetts under the New Haven monopoly. The parcels post, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the new Commerce Court will, I believe, tend to remedy this situation.

Banks for Workingmen.

"I am in favor of banks for workingmen, established by the capital of workingmen and directed by them, for [illegible] accommodation and credit. Such a system exists in one of the Canadian provinces and was advocated by Pierre Jay, our former Bank Commissioner, who is now connected with a large New York bank.

"The State Board of Health should be enlarged and given more money to increase its usefulness. It should be enabled to make broader and more extensive examinations into all food products and into other matters pertaining to public health. Furthermore, the State Board should be in complete control of all diseases dangerous to public health, including consumption.

"I regret to see the great consolidation of banks in Boston which has occurred in recent years, and the increased control exercised by these consolidated banks over various smaller banking institutions. The banking power of the few over the institutions of the many is obnoxious to business, and beneficial, principally, to the stockholders of the banks. I should not like to see, however, the independence of these consolidated banks slip away from New England and become linked to the New York financial control which seems to take over the whole of New England.

Urges More Parks.

"I am in favor of increased park systems in our cities and towns. For the welfare of future generations parks and playgrounds are essential. With the same expenditure of money, and with some care, cities and towns may be made more beautiful and healthful. Countless millions of dollars have been wasted in the rebuilding of our cities that lacked original care in laying out [illegible] strides are [illegible] to overcome this evil in the West.

"The 1915 movement in Boston is doing excellent work along this line, as well as in other lines.

"The greatest trouble in our country today is that big business has ceased to run, in many channels, on a moral business basis. Business schemes and methods have cast a shadow on [illegible] honesty, causing unnecessary suspicion on the part of labor in some instances, as well as a general unwarranted dissatisfaction in the minds of the public. It is the old case of the great majority suffering for the wrongs of the few, for it is certain, to my mind, that the majority of business men are honest, but when dishonest big business is exposed all business suffers.

"I am strongly in favor of assisting our farmers in every way possible. To reduce the high cost of living the return from [illegible] more to [illegible]

'Mr. White Warns Republican Party It Must Stop Protecting Special Privileges.

[illegible] Massachusetts cannot better spend money than [illegible] education which stimulates the agriculturist, the farmer, the dairyman, the poultryman, the fruit grower and the [illegible] raiser. I urged the law which made Massachusetts Agricultural College [illegible] a State college, owned and controlled by the State. Massachusetts must [illegible] own institution, every necessity to enlarge, assist and stimulate agriculture.

[illegible] giving the Massachusetts Institute of Technology its $1,000,000 [illegible] I insisted that the State should first [illegible] $500,000 and then $500,000 more when the Institute itself had subscribed a million. This method stimulated the graduates to help the institution, and I am glad to learn that the necessary million has been raised by them. Thus two millions are now at hand to consummate the plans of this most worthy and needy institution. On the other hand, the State, in making this large gift, establishes a precedent; giving only as much as the institution asking aid gives itself.

End Wars Forever.

"President Taft is to be congratulated upon the success of his efforts for an Anglo-American peace treaty. It is to be [illegible] that other similar treaties will be [illegible] with France and Japan, as well as [illegible] Germany [illegible] Civilization demands perpetual world-wide peace. War ought to be forever a thing of the past. I feel confident that our French, German and other American sons will certainly indorse treaties of this nature with their fatherlands.

"I look for the extension of postal savings banks. I believe these will be successful and of incalculable public good, especially in such places as have [illegible] class postoffices but lack safe institutions for the people's savings. Already some of these smaller offices have deposits ranging from $20,000 to $50,000. This is sufficient demonstration that the people desire a safe and convenient place in which to harbor their savings. This act of Congress stimulates thrift and conserves the resources of our population. The original sum of $100,000 appropriated for the extension of this work by the government was, of course, totally inadequate. I have been informed, however, that a further sum of $500,000 has now been voted for this purpose.

Praises Highway Commission.

"In the last few years I have watched with interest the excellent work of our State Highway Commission. The work of this commission in building good roads is a great record, considering the money it has had to spend. It would be impossible for me to remember the various special bills I have assisted and urged for highway work in the State. The public will appreciate the new road over Jacob's Ladder, and the special appropriation for the Cape Cod road, which will finish the highway from Truro to Provincetown.

"The people of Berkshire have just obtained a goodly sum of money to remedy the road from Greenfield to North Adams over Hoosac Mountain. I have worked for these highways and others in the State. Good roads, and plenty of them, are necessary to our welfare and happiness, and should be built as fast as possible for the development of our State. They are a good investment.

Would Help the Life Savers.

"I have had special opportunity to know personally a good deal about the United States life savers on our shores, and it may be of special interest for me to state at this time that I shall do all I can with my friends in Congress to help the enactment of a United States law giving the life savers a pension. Their pay is small, and their service is without parallel as to courage, risk and sacrifice. Our shores are constantly guarded, practically their whole length, by these brave men, men who do not know what danger means. [illegible]

[illegible] to carry lights after dark has been opposed to some extent by the [illegible] I feel confident, however, that my work year after year for this bill is right, and that the majority of our citizens appreciate the necessity of this law as a measure of protection to the owners of vehicles and automobiles alike.

Controlled by No Interest.

"I am not controlled directly or indirectly by any machine nor by any interest. I shall serve the public honestly and fearlessly. I have no fear of the outcome of the direct nomination vote on the twenty-sixth day of September. The people of Massachusetts know that I have done all in my power for their best interests as I have seen them.

"I thank the Sunday AMERICAN for placing at my disposal this valuable space in which to express to the public some of my views."

GOVERNOR TENER TO BE GUEST OF ELKS

Massachusetts Lodges to Have Annual Outing at Bass Point Wednesday.

MASSACHUSETTS Elks will hold their second annual outing at Bass Point on Wednesday next, and it will be a gala time in the history of this great benevolent order, if all the plans are executed. It is going to be one of the big events of the year. Governor Tener of Pennsylvania has written that he "would not miss it," and he will be one of the notables from away who will partake of Bay State hospitality.

There are 8,000 Elks in Massachusetts, and it is expected that about one-half that number will attend the outing.

The program provides for the serving of lunch from 12 to 1 o'clock at the clubhouse of the Boston Lodge on Somerset street and after it is over a business meeting will be held. The boat for Bass Point will start at 2:30 o'clock. At the point an old-fashioned shore dinner will be served.

The committee in charge is: E. Mark Sullivan, chairman; James L. Johnston, treasurer, both of Boston; J. Clifford Entwistle, secretary of Salem; Cornelius J. Flood of Lynn, Charles D. Barton of Melrose, George S. Harvey of Malden and Richard D. Barry of Revere.

700 ELEGANT LOTS IN WEST ROXBURY

Owing to the large demand for building lots developed by the Securities Real Estate Trust of Boston, which they were enabled to supply within the last few weeks, a very large crew of workmen and teams have just completed the laying out of about 700 large new lots in West Roxbury. Two miles of streets have now been completed and water pipes laid in all streets.

The entire property is a natural park, containing thousands of shade trees of a large variety, almost every lot being a shaded grove by itself. The property is highly situated, having a frontage on Centre street, being an accepted, macadamized city street, with water and gas, and commands a view for many miles over the surrounding country.

Throngs of people are expected to visit this new property in order to get a first choice of the most attractive lots at low prices before they are advanced. The property is within the five-cent fare limit of Boston, and can be reached by three different lines of cars from Forest Hills Elevated station direct through the Washington street boulevard to Grove street.

REALTY SALES SHOW GREAT IMPROVEMENT

NUMBER OF DEALS PENDING

Titles Change Hands on Two Properties in the South End District.

By FRANK A. LAVELLE.

AS the vacation season draws nearer to a close the real estate market continues to show marked improvement. Though no deals of exceptional size were reported last week the total volume of trading is considered a fairly good record, especially for this time of year.

Many of the brokers have some negotiations on for some very good deals and a number of these may be closed out any day. Most of the intown dealers are optimistic at the improvement in the market during the past few weeks, and this is expected to be still greater as the Fall advances. Trading in the suburbs continues lively and all the suburban dealers report busy times.

Among the sales reported yesterday was the purchase by David H. Greenhood of two South End parcels. One, the property at No. 11 Way street, near Harrison avenue, was taken from Annie H. Hallisey. It comprises a brick house and 1,250 square feet of land, all taxed for $3,800, of which $2,200 is on the land. The other is the brick house and 1,250 square feet of land at No. 17 Way street, all taxed for $3,300, of which $2,200 is on the land. H. Bertram Finer was the grantor.

BIG MID-SUMMER PIANO SALE

DON'T PAY TRUST PRICES

FOR ANY MAKE PIANO

I have been telling the people for years that it is not necessary to pay luxury prices to the Piano Trust for pianos. A piano is no longer a luxury. I have taken it out of that class. I have made it as easy to secure a piano (by reducing the price and making the terms of purchase liberal) as it is to secure any other household necessity.

I have educated the public on piano values to such an extent that the intelligent man or woman, who knows how to go about it, can now buy a piano for much less than it could be bought for three years ago. I am in receipt of letters daily from all over New England, praising me for my stand against the Piano Trust, and I am selling more pianos at lower prices than ever before. It pays to protect the public.

Don't buy any make piano till you see me.

Truthfully,

(Signed) J. P. COLLINS,

WHEAT WITHOUT A REDEEMING FEATURE

JOSEPH F. PRITCHARD.

CHICAGO, Aug. 26.—The wheat market during the week just closed was weak without a redeeming feature. Not only was the volume of business smallest in many weeks, but the business passing was almost wholly on professional account. A few orders were received from the small outside markets but those orders were mainly on professional account. Prices lost ½ to ⅝ cent for the week. The cash trade was almost an uneven quantity the first three days of the week, but on Thursday there was a fair export and good milling business and later there was more satisfactory conditions surrounding the entire situation. Notes from the Spring wheat country overbalance all else in the matter of price factors. Crop reports were too conflicting in character to receive general attention as well as to be acted upon by the average speculator.

While reports of frost poured into the Chicago wheat pit from many portions of the prairie provinces, the general opinion here was that the wheat was too far advanced to suffer any great amount of loss.

According to the best advices from the Northwest, it is too early to form any definite opinion as to the quality of the Spring wheat crop of the three States. The movement is only in its infancy state and, to judge from present samples that have arrived, would be premature. It is believed from the samples already shown that there will be a great deal of poor wheat and that the movement will show a wide range of quality, with the bulk of it of an inferior grade. Special returns to a local crop expert from country agents under date of August 15 and 16 make conditions of Spring wheat at harvest 55.2, against 61.5 on August 12. Threshing returns show a general disappointment, both as to rate of yield and quality of grain.

The harvest condition indicates a crop of about 195,000,000 bushels of Spring wheat, with possibly 125,000,000 bushels in Minnesota and the Dakotas. Last year the crop was 231,000,000 bushels, and the three States 176,000,000 bushels. The Commerce of Agriculture of North Dakota estimates the crop of that State at 80,000,000 bushels, compared with a crop less than half that amount one year ago.

FINANCE MUST PUT ITS HOUSE IN ORDER

New Trust Inquiry Answer to Complaints Made by Wall Street.

By BOERSIANER.

CHICAGO, Aug. 26—Of the many investigations proposed by Congress the proposal to start an inquiry as to whether the big combinations shall be controlled or dismembered is a move that meets the approval of everybody, from trust magnate to trust employe. Representative Littleton suggested something of the kind months ago. He put his suggestion in concrete form last month. It was feared at first that his form of inquiry would be diverted by partisan ends, or would

However, a sub-committee of five Senators, headed by Cummins of Iowa, will conduct such an investigation, which is intended primarily to assist the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce in framing a law to meet the business conditions of the present day. This is an effort to ascertain whether or not something can be done to amend the Sherman anti-trust law, or, indeed, to repeal that statute altogether.

The proposition really means that everybody who follows economic questions believes the country has come to a pass where something must be done to settle the question of large corporative entities. From the viewpoint of attorney-generals, half of the national corporations are in contravention of the Sherman act. As a conscientious officer of the government, Wickersham must proceed accordingly. But though the United States Supreme Court in its Standard Oil decision has stated indirectly that laws were made for business and not business for laws, uncertainty still exists. Corporation managers do not know whether this Supreme Court idea will prevail, or whether Wickersham will abide by his oath of office. It is stated that in this Senate investigation people from all parts of industrial life will be summoned. These will include John D. Rockefeller, J. P. Morgan and E. H. Gary, as well as Samuel Gompers, John Mitchell, the average wholesaler and common run of retailers. They will be asked to give their unrestrained views, following which it is hoped some courageous Congressman or Senator will promise a statutory remedy.

Lessons From Abroad.

Perhaps it will not be amiss to suggest that a few European financiers, captains of industry and legislators be invited to give their views, if not in person, then by deposition. Some things may be learned from trans-Atlantic experts. There is much information, for example, in the British Companies act, in which is clearly defined what managers many and may not do. The stipulations regarding the promotion of new corporations may prove to be especially valuable, as their aim is to protect the investor against fraud—not to hamper legitimate enterprise.

Perhaps there are some others who are unaware that were English of continental promoters to do what has been done and is being done in this country, the end would be a jail sentence. Perhaps property in Great Britain is regarded as unduly precious. It seems to be held in higher esteem than life. The swiftness of criminal proceedings appears to suggest this. But withal, this slant toward materialism has made England a safe place for the investor, small as well as large.

On the continent, particularly in France, Germany and Austria, corporations are closely regulated, though in a sense that would not appeal to an American. Monopolies, indeed, are fostered—with the supervision of the government. In Germany they are directly encouraged; so much so that the government sees to it that every signatory to a combination keeps his part of the contract. To an American, it may look monstrous to have the government strictly enforce a monopolistic contract. But German economists say that it is this course that has lifted Germany to the front as an industrial nation. Germany, they point out, regard business in the concrete in that it looks upon the world as a competitive field—keen competition between nations—hence the government lends a hand to help along its people.

STOCKS HIT LOW LEVELS FOR YEAR

Big Bankers Fail to Support Market and Railroads and Industrials Slump.

By SHOTWELL.

NEW YORK, Aug. 26—Prices of standard railroad and industrial stocks sank to new low levels for the year in Wall Street to-day. In the last half hour there was a feeble rally of from a fraction to a full point from the low level, due to covering by shorts. Final prices showed losses of from a fraction to a full point. Sentiment in the Street is so pessimistic that practically no attention was paid to the announcement that there had been another decrease in the number of idle freight cars.

Emboldened by large paper profits, the several bear pools continued to attack the market the past week and succeeded in forcing prices down to new low records for this year. Their operations were assisted by announcements on the part of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific that they would adopt retrenchment policies and would have to lay off several thousand men before the end of September. Curtailment of expenses at this season of the year is very significant because the railroads at this time of the year are usually making extensions and increasing their rolling stock in preparation for handling the crops.

Inopportune Season for Cut.

Had the railroads decided to cut expenses at any other season of the year, the announcements would have been received with much less apprehension, but, as it is, Wall Street accepts the action of the officials of the Harriman lines as evidence that they expect further contraction in all lines of trade.

Curtailment of expenses by the railroads will lessen the demand for steel and iron, and reports by trade journals that the condition of the steel and iron trade was less favorable added to the gloom that prevailed in the financial district. An attempt was made early in the week to weaken Steel common with a report that the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, the Republic Iron & Steel and the Lackawanna Steel Company would be consolidated, but President Topping of the Republic denied that his company would be part of any such merger, and the story as a stock market influence fell flat.

No Support by Big Bankers.

Lack of support to prices on the part of the big banking interests has enabled the bear pools to force prices down, and the disinterested attitude of the Rockefeller and Morgan parties is not liked by those bankers in favor of higher prices. Bankers close to the Morgan interests explain the inactivity of the big interests by saying that while many persons have been hurt in the continuous depreciation of prices, the market as a whole has not reached a level that would indicate any panicky feeling, and for this reason the Morgan and Rockefeller interests have deemed it unnecessary to come to the support of the market.

This sounds plausible, but the fact that certain high bearish operators are allowed to raid the market and ruin people is not met with favor from the stock trading public.

METAL EXCHANGES.

The New York metal markets were quiet and practically nominal. Lake copper, 12.75 to 13; electrolytic, 12.50 to 12.62½; casting, 12.25 to 12.50. Tin, 42.80 to 43; lead, 4.43 to 4.53; spelter, 5.90 to 6. Antimony, Cookson's, 8.30 to 8.50.

STOCKS CONTINUE ON DOWNWARD COURSE

Bears So Plentiful That It Might Result in Their Own Undoing.

By E. A. WILKINS.

STATE STREET, Aug. 26.—Stock market values continue on a downward course and meet with little or no resistance so far as any buying power is concerned. The bull party has flown to the woods in utter despair. Those that were bulls are now predicting still lower prices, and they are probably right, but the danger now is that there is too much company on this side of the market. This fact alone might lead to their undoing. That a readjustment is now going on in the business world cannot be questioned. There are several economic questions to be solved, and the stock market is going through the evolution of discounting them. Prices usually go as much below their worth as they range in boom periods above their intrinsic value.

Position Technically Bullish.

The bulls have the advantage of an improved technical position through the liquidation of large holdings of securities, while the bears are favored with a badly mixed economic problem. The labor question is the most important factor in the situation at present. In speculative cycles the price of labor is almost the last to advance and also the last to decline. No cycle is complete until labor has been liquidated. A start in this direction has been made by some of the Western railroad managers. It is forced by circumstances and will likely become more acute as time goes on.

Stock prices received no impetus from the adjournment of Congress, neither does general business show any marked signs of improvement. Earnings of both railroads and industrial companies are poor and restriction rather than expansion is the slogan. Economy is being practiced through necessity. The trust buster is taking a vacation, but he will soon be back on the job again. It is not unlikely that the big United States Steel Corporation may fare the same as the Standard Oil and American Tobacco Companies have at the hands of the Supreme Court.

Coppers Ridiculously Low.

And what can be said of the Boston copper share market? Prices have been lopped off and values almost ruthlessly destroyed. Forced liquidation has put the prices of some stocks to ridiculously low levels. Some that were allowable as collateral are no longer in that class. The decline here was precipitated by the break in the Wall Street market. Sacrifices had to be made, and many fortunes have been swept aside. With all this the metal market continues firm, although a hand-to-mouth policy still exists among the consumers, with no stocks of metal on hand.

The Finlay report on the copper mines of Michigan came at an inopportune time, for the market was in a weak and nervous state. Many take exceptions to the expert's report to the legislature of that State wherein he says that the limit of profitable working is now in most cases in plain sight. The writer remembers that some years before D. L. Demmon died he said that the lease of life of the Franklin mine was but seven or eight years. Progressive management, however, with the acquisition of additional property and proper mining methods spoiled this argument and the same thing applies to many other of the Lake Superior mines.

Railroad Notes

In order to place the California tour within the range of possibility for those of even modest means, the system of periodical low fares was some years ago inaugurated, and the Rock Island Lines have already announced similar fares from the east to points on the Pacific Coast from September 15th to October 15th of this year.

During the period the Rock Island will operate daily through tourist sleeping cars, in which all of the essential things for comfort are provided at about half the cost of the standard sleeping car. These cars are attached to fast trains from Chicago, St. Louis and Memphis, providing dining car service and other details of travel luxury, and by their use, in connection with the low colonist fares, the trip to California may be made at exceedingly small expense.

Beautifully illustrated booklets and other literature descriptive of California and the intervening territory may be had for the asking at the office of the General N. E. Agent, Mr. S. L. Parrott, 288 Washington street, Boston.

The Great Northern Railway is distributing to New England through its N. E. Passenger Agent, Wm. A. Seward, a finely written and illustrated book on "North Dakota, Where Wheat Is King." The book contains useful information for people contemplating trying their fortunes in our rich Northwest. Book may be had for the asking at Boston office, 264 Washington street.

Mr. J. W. Kearney has been appointed manager of the Publicity Department recently inaugurated by the Missouri Pacific Railway Company at St. Louis, Mo. Mr. Kearney announces that the Missouri Pacific-Iron Mountain railroads have let contracts for fifty passenger service coaches of steel construction. Bids have also been asked for additional passenger locomotives and freight cars. Fifty thousand tons of heavy steel rails are being used for retracking.

J. Francis of Chicago, General Passenger Agent of the Burlington, was in Boston Saturday looking after New England business for the road. Mr. Francis has promoted Alexander Stocks to the position of New England Passenger Agent of the C., B. & Q. R. R. Mr. Stocks was formerly City Passenger and Ticket Agent. This promotion was particularly pleasing to Railroad Row.

COTTON STRONG ON UNFAVORABLE NEWS

World's Mills Short of Supplies; Record Movement Looked for in September.

By EDWARD LOW RANLETT.

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—The cotton market has taken an upward swing as the result of unfavorable reports. There was no other influence favoring the bull position, and even this at times failed to stimulate activity or support as against other depressing conditions, although the English labor situation and the Morocco controversy between France and Germany have undoubtedly played a part in affecting foreign sentiment on trade conditions. This was evidenced by indifferent buying by English spinners, both in Liverpool and in Southern spot markets.

American receipts of new cotton have been very large and while taken promptly for export and home consumption, there has been no sign of buoyancy in Southern spot markets; some cotton has been shipped from the South for lodgment against New York contracts.

Southern Mills Buy In New York.

Southern mills, however, have been buyers in New York from the New York stock, and the mills of the world are short of cotton to an extent not experienced in any recent year.

In the world's possible supplies of raw material for the manufacturer of cotton goods, no excess over ordinary requirements can be seen. The American harvest may approximate 14,500,000 bales, but the India crop is in the nature of a failure, and that of Egypt probably will not largely exceed last year's.

Trade conditions, however, all over the world are not good, as was the case in the corresponding period of 1910, and while mill stocks and visible supplies are at a very low ebb this condition will only influence the price of American cotton for the first eight or ten weeks of the new season, which begins September 1.

The gin houses of the South are already active in many sections, and a September movement in excess of any previous year seems assured. This means that the dearth in supplies which now prevails will be greatly if not altogether relieved by October 1.

Meantime, in the cotton goods division of the dry goods trade the mills seem to be able to postpone anything more than temporary commitments in the market for raw material, and trade conditions seem to justify this course.

The condition of the growing crop will be reported by the government, September 1, from replies received from correspondents as of date of August 25. This condition will compare with 9.1, reported in July, and the trade generally expects a loss in percentage of at least 10 points.

August Deterioration Great.

Deterioration during August was much greater than normal. This result must be attributed to high temperatures over certain sections and lack of rain, while in others too much rain has been prolific of injury and a loss in fruitage.

In Texas and Oklahoma the damage probably has been excessive—in fact, the entire Western cotton belt is quite likely to show a serious loss in prospective yield as a result of August weather conditions. It is none the less true that few estimates for the ultimate result have yet been made for a crop in that section under last year's, and most things point to a greater yield by 750,000 bales for the four Western States of the cotton belt, as compared with the growth of 1910-11.

For the Eastern cotton belt a better result is promised. It is true that from the heavy fruitage and luxurious growth of July forecasts were far greater than record yields, but this very condition of the plant made it vulnerable to insect injury and to climatic influences.

Last year's yield from the States east of the Mississippi river was about 6,750,000 bales; that is to say, from the growth of 1910-11. Most things point to a large increase over last year from all of these States, though a conservative minimum calculation would put the gain at 1,250,000 bales, provided the present promise is maintained.
